The hammer is an instrument for building, repairing, and creating. It is the symbol of the men who maintain our school. It represents those who shovel paths through the snow and replace burned-out light bulbs. Students too must be maintained. Each body and each mind must be kept in good working order. Paths must be shoveled to stagnant minds so students can understand new knowledge and explore their own thoughts. Burned-out childhood notions must be replaced with new goals and more mature ideas.

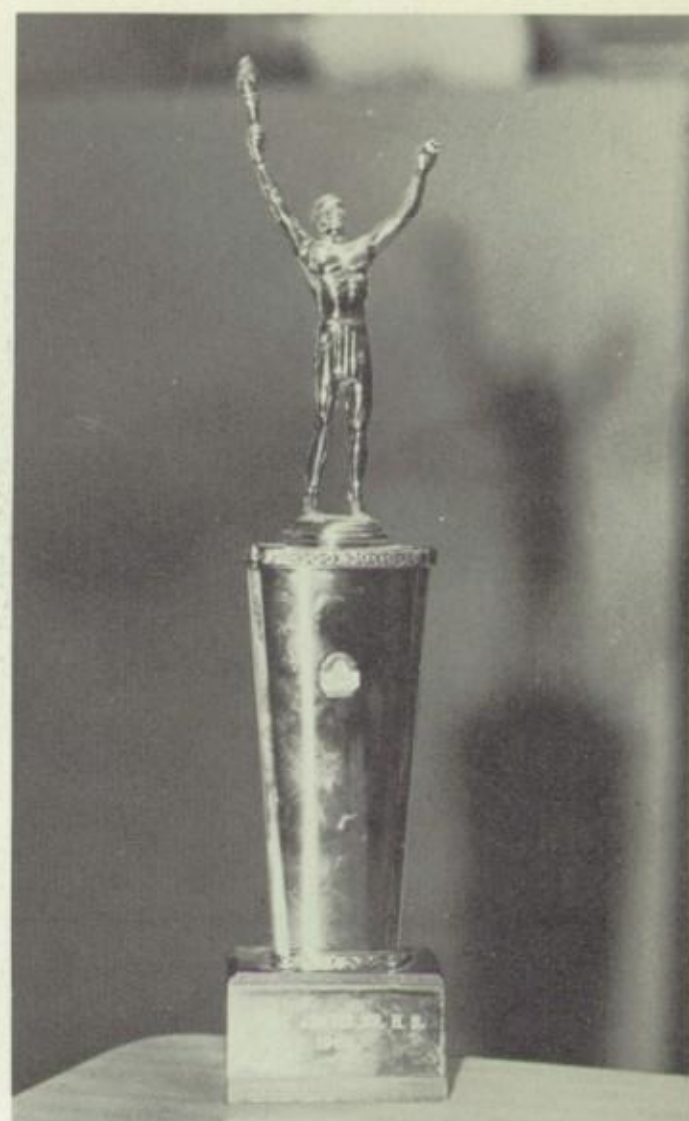

There are more custodians in our school than those who sweep. There are more hammers than those that hang from workmen's pockets. Each teacher is a custodian and each facet of school life, a tiny hammer. Together they form a tool capable of molding and maintaining a human being--the student.

... "do all you can to accomplish something, and do not let it seem that you have failed in doing your part when I have furnished everything for you."

Cicero

IN MEMORY OF MISS EVELYN HARRIS

Death cannot touch some people. It cannot come near those who can inspire, make happy, teach, -- for these people cheat death. They have already passed on their essence to the safe-keeping of others. Death cannot touch Miss Evelyn Harris.

She was understanding and discipline joined. She tried to know each student individually, his special problems and skills, but personal understanding did not lead to favoritism. She asked us how the weekend party had been as she marked down a zero for the translation we said we hadn't had time to prepare, understanding our need to goof off once in a while, but firm in her belief that you come to school to learn and work.

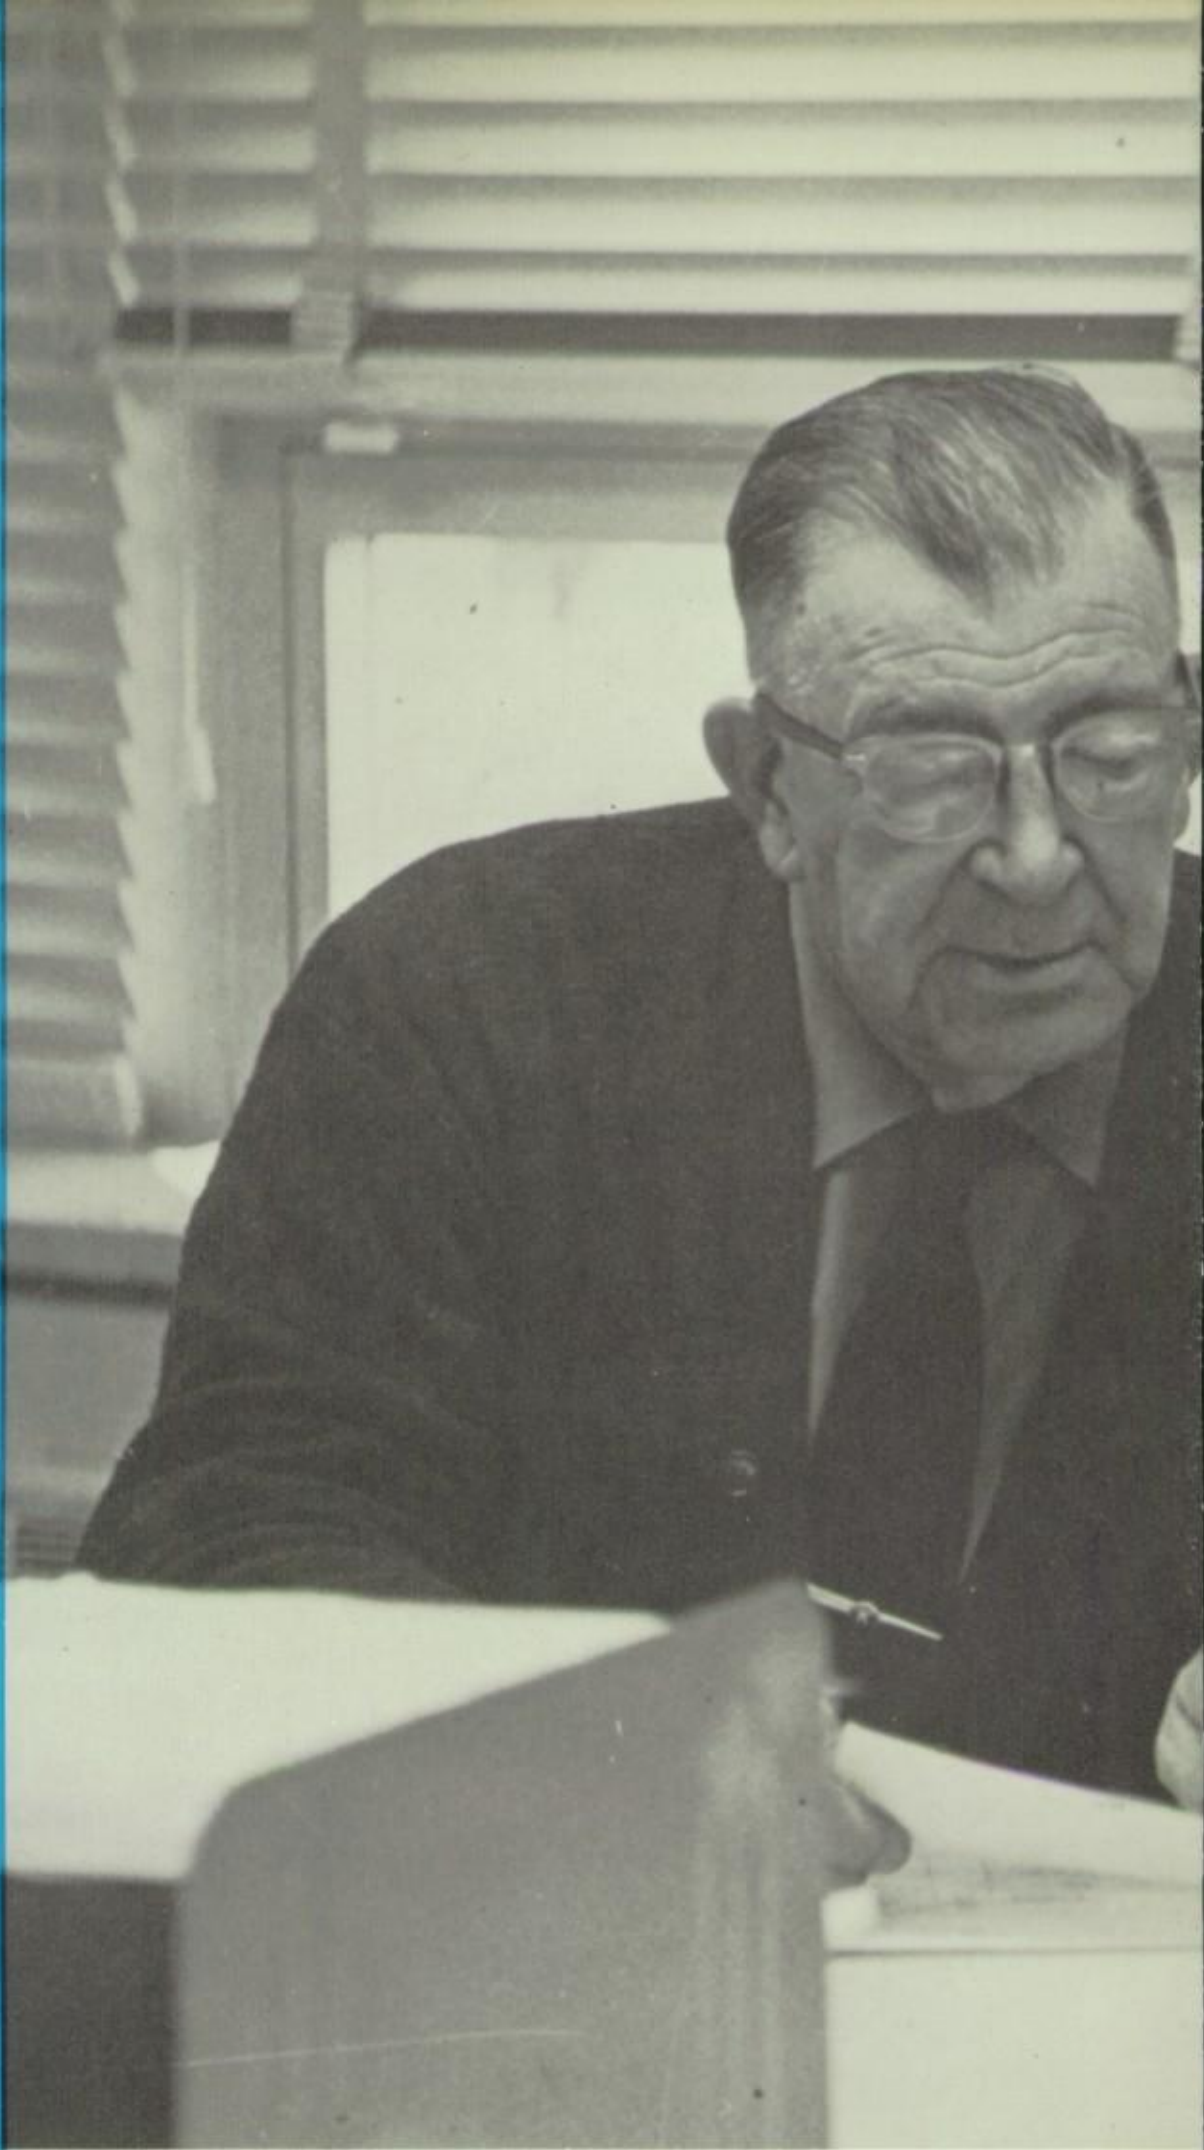

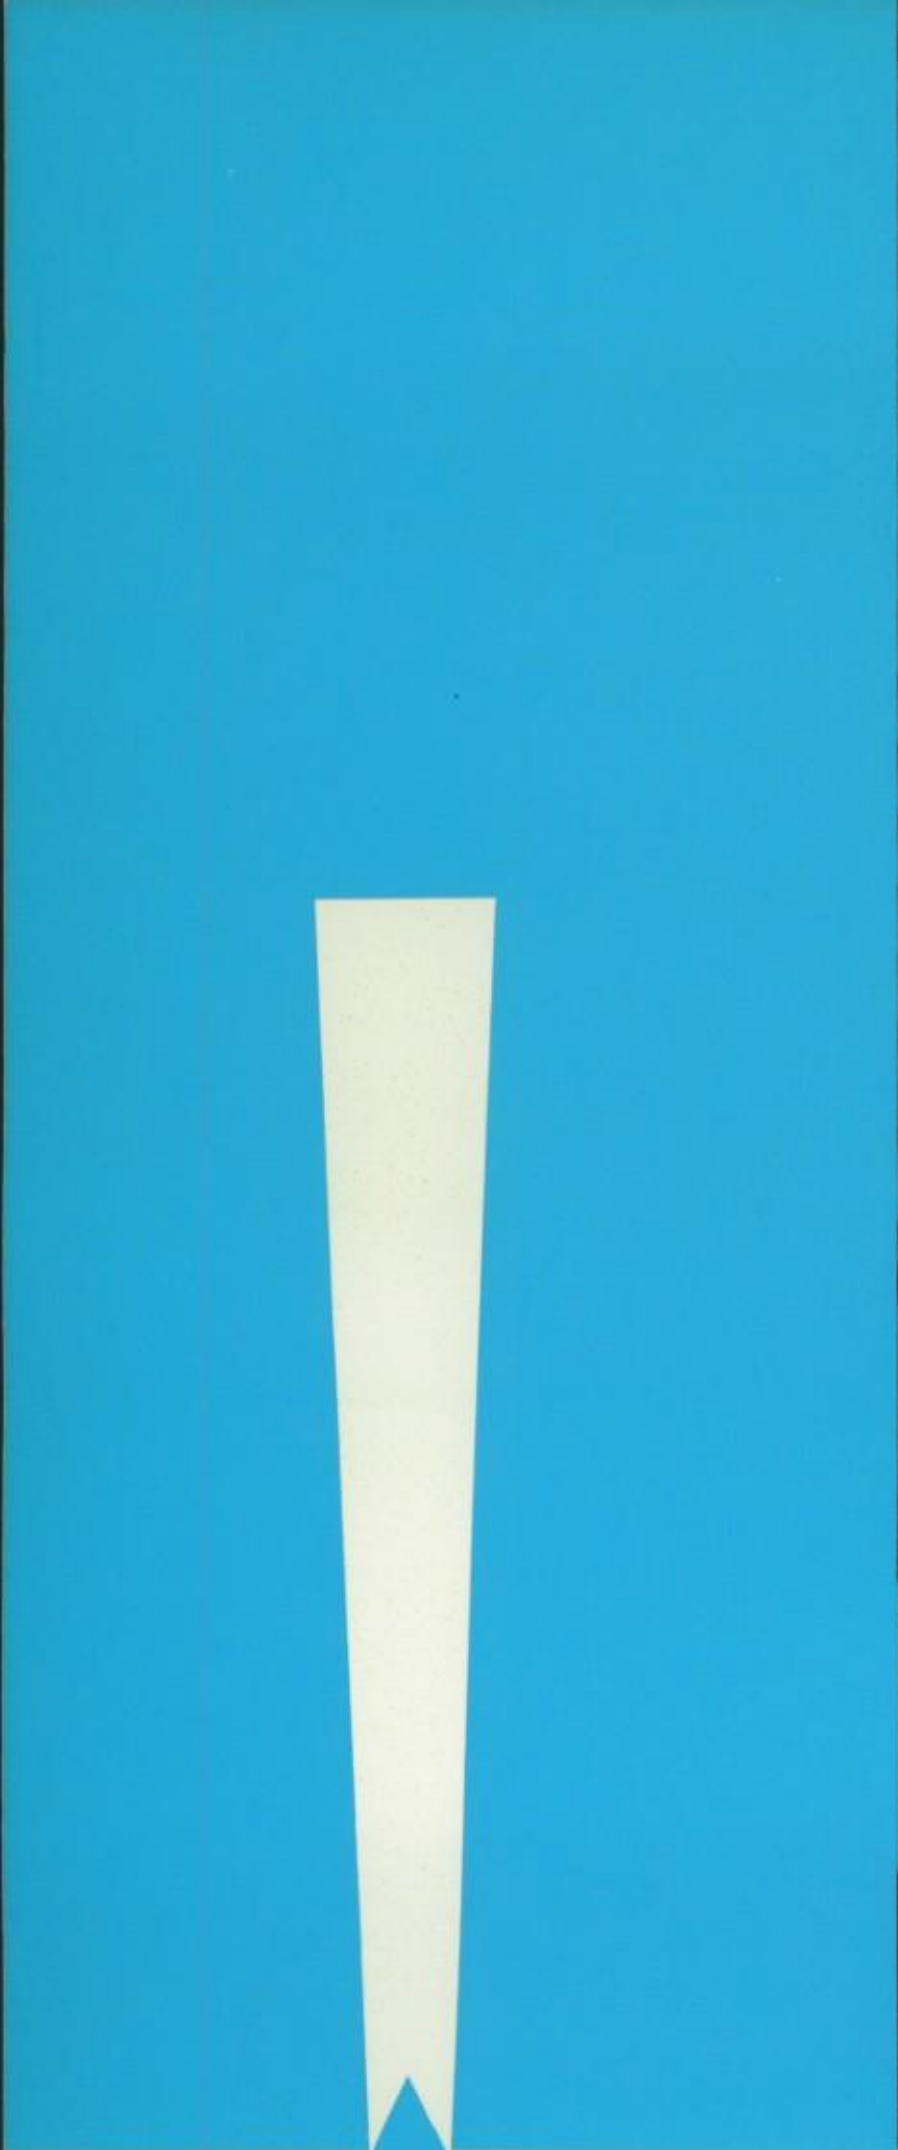

She was wit. Her eyes twinkled as she replied "the Romans said so" to an unanswerable question, and she jokingly warned us about getting "a black mark against the state." She certainly could not be used as an example of the ancient, cob-webby Latin teacher, for she realized the important position of humor in teaching and in life.

She was dedication and inspiration. She believed in the importance of manners, teaching, and ideals and gave herself wholeheartedly to these beliefs, trying to foster this same dedication in others. She was able to make a student who hated Latin want to take it another year. She helped students after school, but only because they wanted to be helped.

She was education. We learned about the conjugation of "duco" and the Catilinarian plot from the Latin course, but we received much more from her.

They make very few people like Miss Evelyn Harris. To wit, understanding, discipline, dedication, and inspiration, to the essence of Miss Harris, we dedicate this yearbook.

When is the next P.T.A. meeting? What is the cafeteria serving Tuesday? What can be done to improve the English curriculum? How far should I go in disciplining a student? These are only a few of the many questions which must be answered by the principal of a high school. His responsibility covers the entire school program. He must work with the student body as a whole and each student as an individual. He must be acquainted with all areas of teaching and administration and must serve as the school's spokesman in the community. He must be able to work with people and know how to make decisions alone. A principal's job is one of challenge and hard work, but also one of deep satisfaction.

BOARD OF EDUCATION

The Board of Education's duties extend, not only over the high school, but over the entire school district. It must budget the finances of the district, set school policies, and make sure all state and federal requirements are met. Above all, it is the responsibility of the Board of Education to see that the highest possible level of education is maintained throughout the school district.

The superintendent of schools is the head of the school system. It is his job to see that all decisions of the Board of Education are carried out and that all administrative duties are handled. He must make the decisions that allow the daily progress of the school system to continue.

Guidance counselor, Mrs. Alma LaRue, completes a list of items she must check on before the end of the day.

Head guidance counselor, Mr. Guy Shaw, awaits a student and the start of one of the many conferences he has each day.

Miss Geraldine Callahan, school librarian, checks card file for overdue books.

Essential to any well-run school is an efficient guidance department. To compute the schedules of the students and faculty is only part of a guidance counselor's job. Advice is given to students on subjects ranging from how to use up an extra study hall to whether college or the armed forces would be a better choice for a senior. Each student's problems are discussed individually and solutions are sought. The work of the guidance department is very important in the shaping of the student's future in high school and after graduation.

The library is also an important part of the school. Through the library, a student can expand beyond the classroom. In its books, he can find information and enjoyment. Selecting books which will meet the student's needs and keeping the library well organized and up-to-date are the chief responsibilities of the librarian.

The health of the student body is of vital concern to the school. The school nurse and dental hygienist, with the assistance of Dr. Harrison Murray, check each student's ears, eyes, teeth, and general fitness.

PATHS MUST BE SHOVELED

TO STAGNANT MINDS

ENGLISH - A POEM AND AN ADVERB

Negros march through Alabama, actresses become Joan of Arc burning at the stake, students feverishly read John Donne's poems. In every part of our country there is a great search for identity and purpose. Everyone is asking, "Who am I?"

English is the study of language, literature, but most important, people. It teaches us how to communicate with others, express our own ideas, and delve into the writings and thoughts of those who made an impact on the world. It guides us as we seek the answer to the question of our identity.

In the tenth grade, the student is introduced to literature from many different countries. He may read Lord of the Flies or Crime and Punishment, but his view is always toward achieving a deeper understanding of the work, the author, and the culture from which the book arose.

In the junior year, the study of literature is narrowed down to the American scene. The great writing of this country, from The Declaration of Independence to the novels of Ernest Hemingway, are explored and examined. The influence of social, economic, and religious movements on these works is recognized and discussed.

The Senior Student studies the literature of Great Britain. Emphasis is placed on the development of the literature and language of England as a result of historic and cultural happenings. Miracle plays are produced with student actors; Shakespeare--though introduced earlier--is studied and enjoyed; Winston Churchill's speeches are discussed; and the poetry of T.S. Eliot is read. Each Senior, therefore, gains a broad, over-all, yet richly colored view of English literature.

In addition to the required English, two optional courses are offered--English Composition and Speech. English Composition is a course designed to give the student interested in writing a chance to develop and refine his talents in that area of expression. He is given a deeper view into the various forms of fiction and non-fiction and is allowed to practice writing several of these forms. Speech is a course in which the fundamentals of public speaking are taught. Both the mechanical and mental processes of speaking are examined, and each student learns to express himself in a clear, fluent manner.

In each of these five courses, the fundamentals of grammar and sentence structure are reviewed and re-emphasized, and exactness and clarity of expression are sought in both writing and speaking. Besides the regular classroom work, all of these courses involve library research and oral or written reports. All of these activities, whether it be reading a poem, discussing a character in a short story, or doing research in the library, teach us to think, to communicate, and to wonder about our language, our literature, and our life.

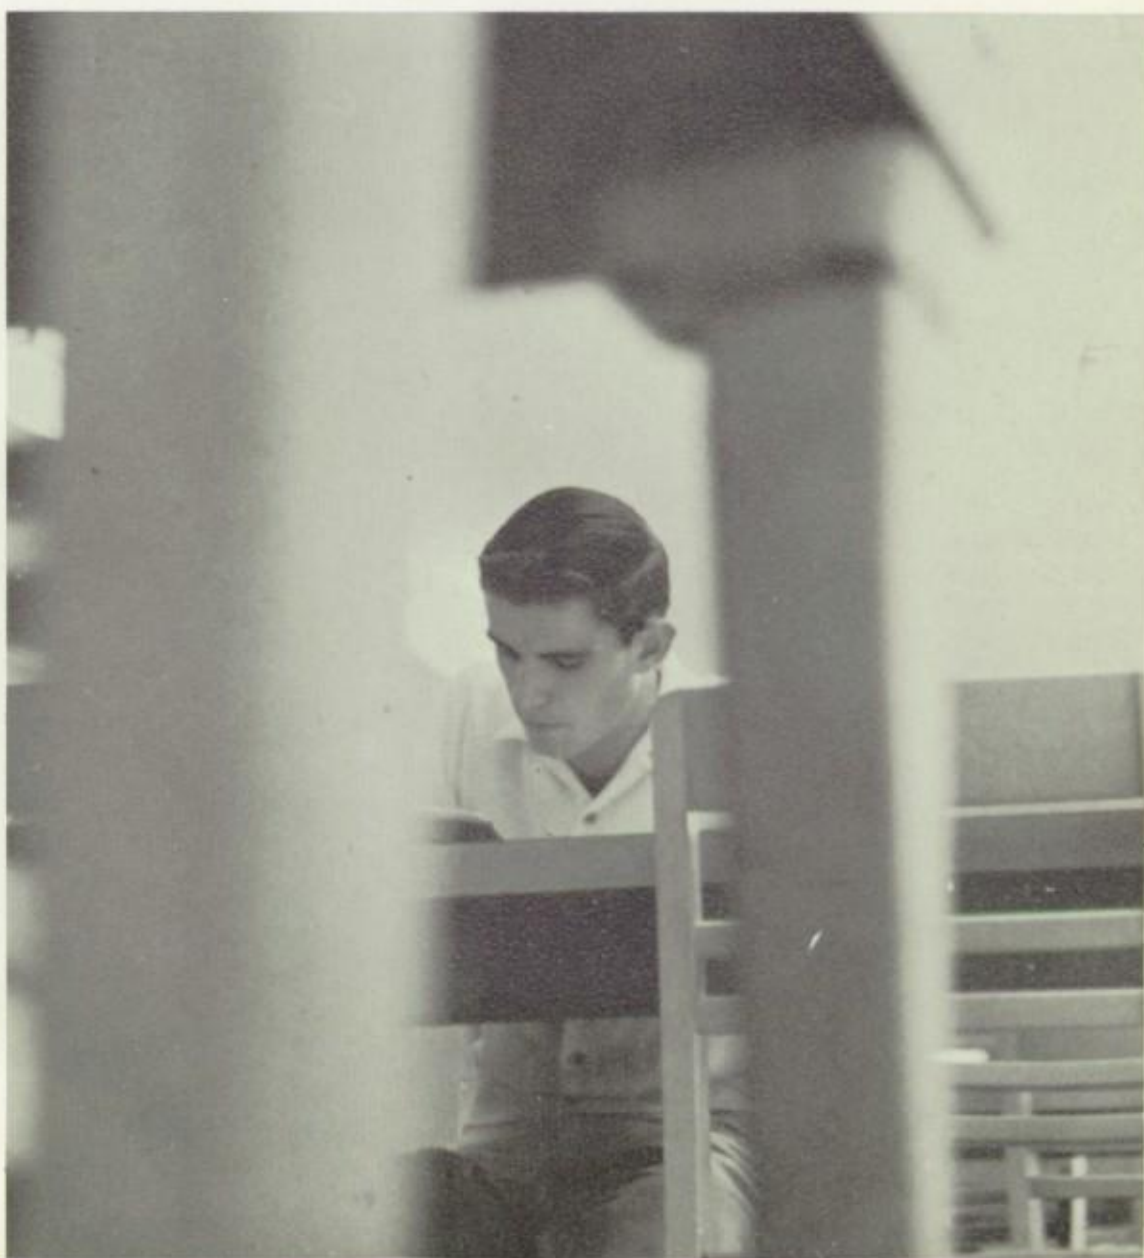

Diversification marks every English course. Students are encouraged to do original work in related areas. Linda Faller and Phyllis Goldman tape English folk ballads for a project.

If one passes Mr. Dorion's room during the first few days of each tri-term, he sees students sitting at the head of the class giving reports on magazine articles. George Gardner gives his opinion of an article he just read.

Walt Lederhaas has found that he must frequently visit the library for English research. The English student has many projects outside of class--symposiums, book reports, reading, research papers.

The understanding of the universe requires the precise examination of its smallest parts. Bob Grawi makes use of the exactness of the analytic balance.

MATH AND SCIENCE - A LOG TABLE AND A BUNSEN BURNER

The twentieth century is an era of outer space rockets and electric computers, an era of change. Every day man's knowledge multiplies. These great changes are reflected in the changing science and math programs in our high school. This year many courses have been revised and new ones, added.

Reasoning and experimentation replace the traditional rote method of teaching in the modern B.S.C.S. biology course. The students taking this experimental course are not required to memorize long lists of science vocabulary words and hundreds of dry facts such as animal phyla. Instead, they learn how scientists discovered various scientific principals, and they spend more time in the laboratory than most biology students.

A radical curriculum change characterizes the chemistry and physics courses. Chemistry and physics now cover areas which were formally taught only in college. Because of these curriculum changes, the difficulty of these courses is steadily increasing.

The math department has tried a new approach to teaching eleventh year mathematics, a combination of trigonometry and algebra. Although the same basic concepts are taught, the methods of presenting the course are different from the older methods. The students in this course learn math through such modern theories as the set theory.

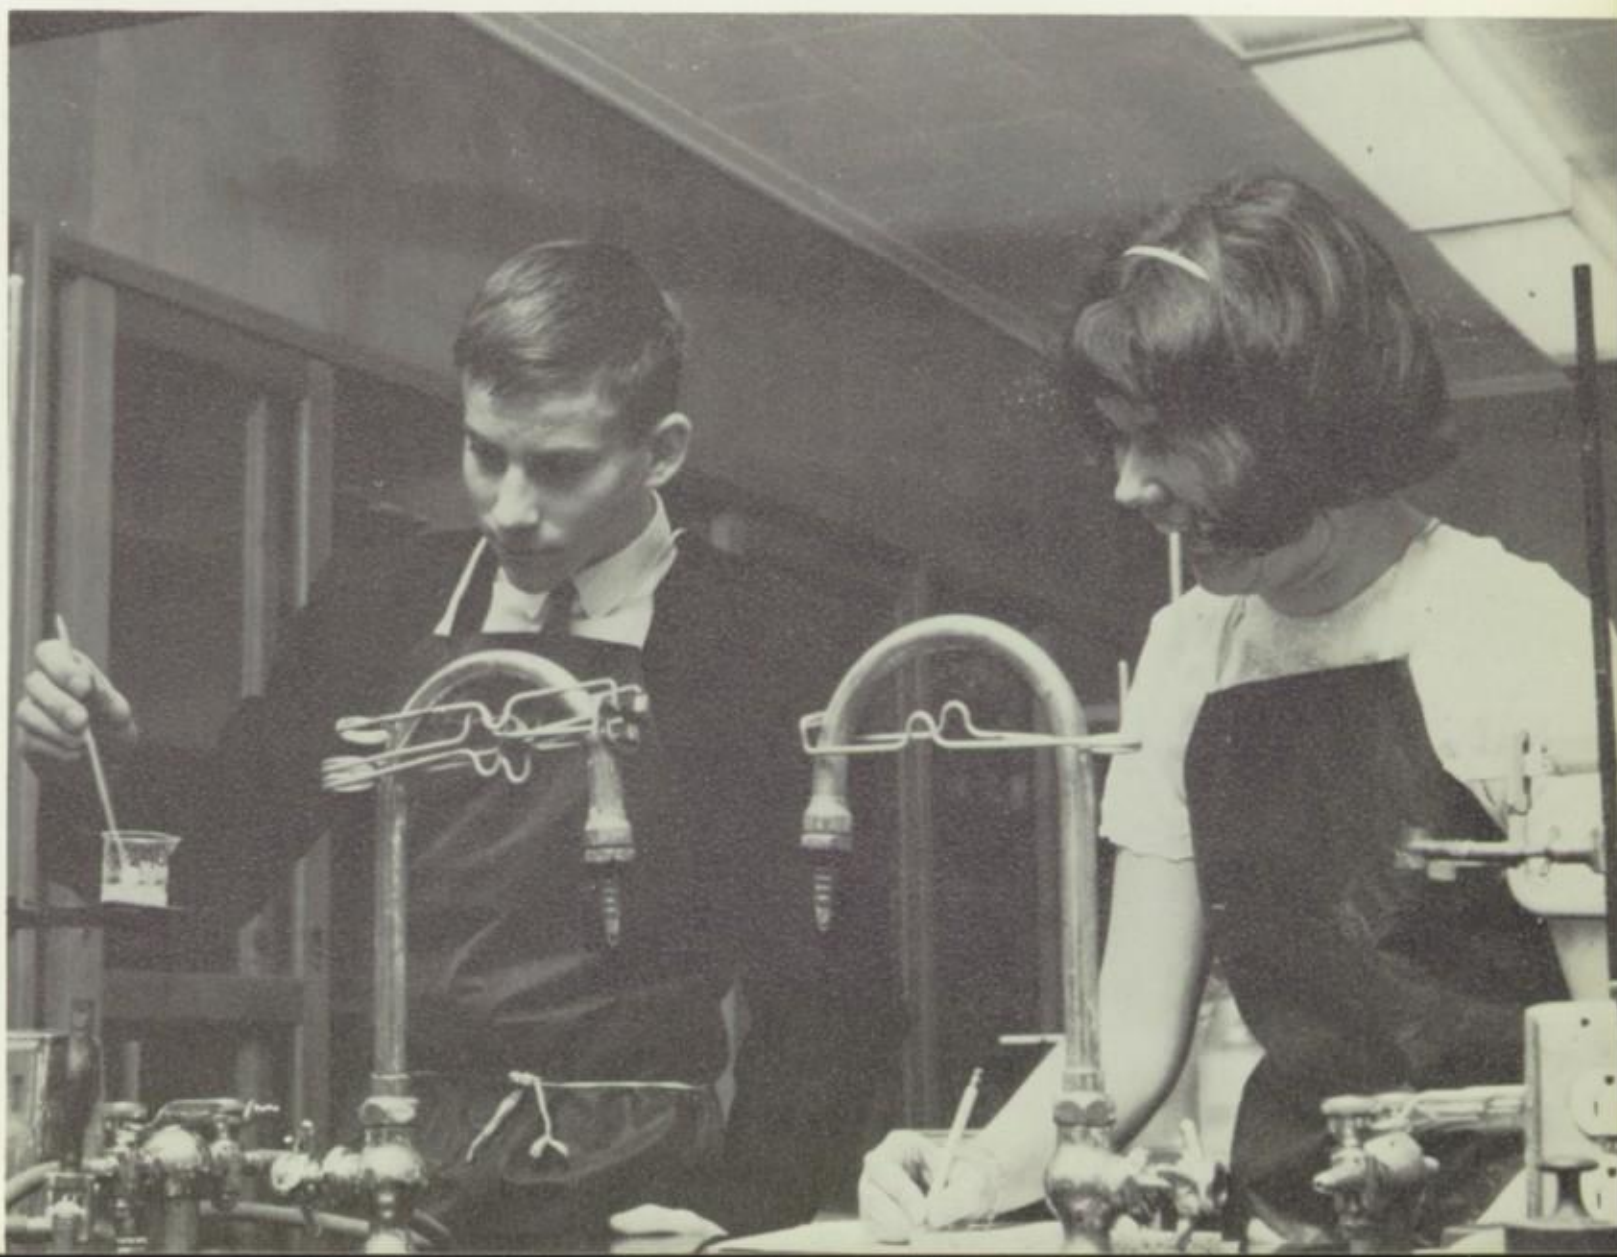

Besides changing old courses, the math and science department has started three new courses--an experimental math course, a college chemistry course, and the P. S. S. C. physics course. The subject matter of these courses extends beyond the areas of chemistry, physics, and math usually covered in high school. Students in the courses explore topics covered in the Freshman year at college. By taking these courses, a student is well prepared to tackle the math and science courses he will take in college.

Thus, Port Jervis Senior High School is keeping up with the changes in the world of math and science by continually expanding the range and depth of the courses.

The mastery of Solid Geometry requires the ability to picture three-dimensional figures. Mr. Graeber explains a theorem using a model of an octahedron.

Will it explode or result in the discovery of a new substance? Gail Pantley and Jack Craft are never sure of the outcome of a Chemistry experiment.

The Social Studies Department cooperates in its use of the bulletin boards. American History students, Bill Wharton, Aggie Caracciolla, and Teena Weiss, take down a European bulletin board in preparation for one on the Western Hemisphere.

SOCIAL STUDIES - A NEWSPAPER AND A GLOBE

William the Conqueror invaded England in 1066, and the Amazon River is 4,000 miles long. The first ten amendments to the Constitution are called the Bill of Rights, and Horace Greeley ran for the Presidency in 1872. These facts, which we all have to learn at one time, are important to Social Studies, but only as a basis on which to build.

Social Studies is not the mere memorization of facts but also their utilization. Its value lies not in the retreating to past eras but in projecting into the future, finding the relationship between facts and ourselves. This understanding is the aim of our social studies department.

The three-year sequence begins in Junior High with World Geography. The actions of people cannot be understood unless their total environment is considered, and, in this course, the climate in which people must live, their economic, political, and social conditions is studied.

The broad survey course, World History, is next in sequence. Here, the student is introduced to a chronology of historical ideas, a study of international cause and effect, which gives him a stronger feeling of interrelationship with other people and other countries.

In the third year, history is narrowed down to the Western Hemisphere, concentrating on the heritage of the Americas. The basis of our political and economic systems is analyzed, preparing more intelligent citizens.

Although the social studies department now offers only three courses, two half year courses, Economics and Political Science, will be introduced next year, broadening even further the opportunity for the understanding of ourselves and the world.

As man improves his means of communication and travel, he steadily shrinks the size of his world. Everyday he becomes closer and closer to other countries. More and more he comes in contact with ideas and people of other lands. Man finds that he can no longer isolate himself from foreign peoples. He must learn to understand them. In order to do this, he has to study other languages besides his own. It is because of man's shrinking world that the high school offers courses in Spanish and French.

Because the study of a language leads to the understanding of another people, it involves more than merely memorizing grammar rules and vocabulary words. A language student must examine the lives, minds, and background of the people he is studying. Learning the tune to a French folk song is just as important as learning the conjugation of a verb.

Besides studying the culture of a people, a language student has to learn to communicate with them. This again entails more than just learning grammar. Mastery of the structure of a language is useless unless one can speak and comprehend. The language, the ability to converse is developed only by constant practice.

All three phases of learning a language are incorporated in the first and second year as well as the third year of study-grammar, culture, and conversation. These three areas cannot be separated, for separation would render a language course incomplete.

LANGUAGE - AN ACCENT AND AN IDIOM

A language teacher must teach students not only how to read and understand a foreign language, but how to express themselves in it. Dr. Restrepo tries to help a student to correctly speak his thoughts in Spanish.

BUSINESS - A TYPEWRITER AND A LEDGER

The drill sinks slowly into the ground in search of oil, coal, and energy for our factories, our businesses, and our homes. If found, this energy may provide a new job, help develop a new product, or sustain the powerful machines of our industry. In a business course, each student is introduced to the economic principles behind these jobs, products, and machines. He is taught the basic skills which are used in the offices and stores of our land.

Typing and shorthand are the most familiar of our business courses. Both teach ways of speeding up the process of written communication. Two typing courses are offered-business typing, which includes practice in typing manuscripts used in business, and personal typing, which teaches the basic skills in using a typewriter for personal needs. There are also two shorthand courses which teach the shorthand symbols and provide practice in their use.

In business arithmetic, students are taught the basic math processes used in business transactions and are given an opportunity to develop their skill in handling numbers. In the bookkeeping course, practice is gained in computing the accounts of actual companies and in keeping a record of their business dealings.

For the more advanced student, an office practice and a retailing course are offered. The office practice course provides buying and selling procedures and customer-salesman relationships.

A fairly new course, business law, is rapidly gaining popularity. Many students, even those who are not planning to enter the business field, are taking advantage of this interesting and useful course. Laws dealing with financial and economic situations are explored and discussed, and practice law problems are solved. The course, therefore, provides information which is useful not only in the business world but also in everyday life.

Besides these courses, many students gain business experience by working in a local store for which they receive extra credit on their grades. Several leave school at lunch time, while others work in the evening.

Working in a store, learning to type, and discussing a business law problem have one main purpose-preparing a student for his place in the business world and enabling our economy to stay alive and grow.

"Practice makes perfect!"
A group of typing students type and retype an exercise, until they make no mistakes.

Art students learn to work with many forms. Walt Lederhaas and Stanley Resnik give shape and expression to a slab of clay.

THE FINE ARTS - A FLUTE AND A CANVAS

Learning is a giving out as well as a taking in, a restating in personal terms of external information. This, the expression of one's self, is what the Fine Arts Department offers.

One can find expression in oils or clay. The Art Department in Port Jervis gives four courses. General Art begins by teaching the fundamentals of perspective, lettering, color, and design. Using this foundation, the student, in Basic Art, concentrates on interior and stage designing, fashion and figure drawing, and advertising. Work is done mainly with water color and oils in Third Year Art. Here also, through a study of history, the student's own art is related to that of famous artists. Also offered is ceramics, in which the subject and practice of making pottery and pieces of sculpture is covered.

Expression can also be found in music, both instrumental and vocal. The band, besides introducing the student to many pieces of music and developing his taste and appreciation, teaches him to be able to play in a group, to learn how one instrument fits into place among others. For individual improvement, instrumental lessons are given, and after school, as an extra-curricular activity, interested students can take a music theory class where the ideas and rules behind the composition of music are studied. Three vocal groups exist, the Boys' and Girls' Glee Clubs and the A-Cappella Choir. Here, as in the band, students can sing with others, learning harmony and new songs and enjoying music. Although the school has not as yet produced any Picassos, Carusos, or Bernsteins, the Fine Arts Department, through paint brush, voice, and oboe has encouraged and enabled the student to learn through expression.

HOMEMAKING AND SHOP -- A NEEDLE AND A LATHE

Smells of freshly baked brownies drift through the halls, and hammers driving in nails ring out. These smells and sounds are the Home Economics and Industrial Arts Departments in action.

The Home Economics Department offers four courses. The first three are primarily for homemaking majors, girls who may go into the field as a vocation. In preparation for such jobs, subjects such as sick and child care, sewing, good grooming, foods, consumer education, and home furnishings are studied. Homemaking 5 is a special course for senior girls who are not home economics majors. Here the essentials of marriage and family living are taught, instructing the girls in how to be better wives and mothers.

The Industrial Arts Department also has a two-fold aim—to instruct boys in the basics of their future jobs and to provide practical experience. There are fourteen courses offered, including such subjects as printing, mechanical drawing, crafts, metal and woodworking, transportation, and shop math. By studying motors and making plates, by welding and making cabinets, this aim is reached.

Home Economics and Industrial Arts are integral parts of the total school curriculum, for besides learning how to speak and write, add and subtract, a boy should be able to hammer a nail and a girl sew on a button.

Spark plugs, transmissions, gears, pistons, camrods—to most of us meaningless terms. Larry Schock learns the uses of the various parts of a car by examining them himself.

Sue Hinaman guides the material through the sewing machine, as she masters one of the many aspects of Homemaking.

PHYSICAL EDUCATION AND DRIVER TRAINING -

A BASKETBALL AND A STEERING WHEEL

The motor roars, the brake is released, and the car rolls slowly away from the curb. One more person has begun driver training.

Driver training is divided into two parts, lecture and car. In lecture, driving procedures, rules of the road, safety precautions, and practical hints in running and owning a car are discussed and learned. In car, practical experience is gained in operating a car in a variety of traffic situations.

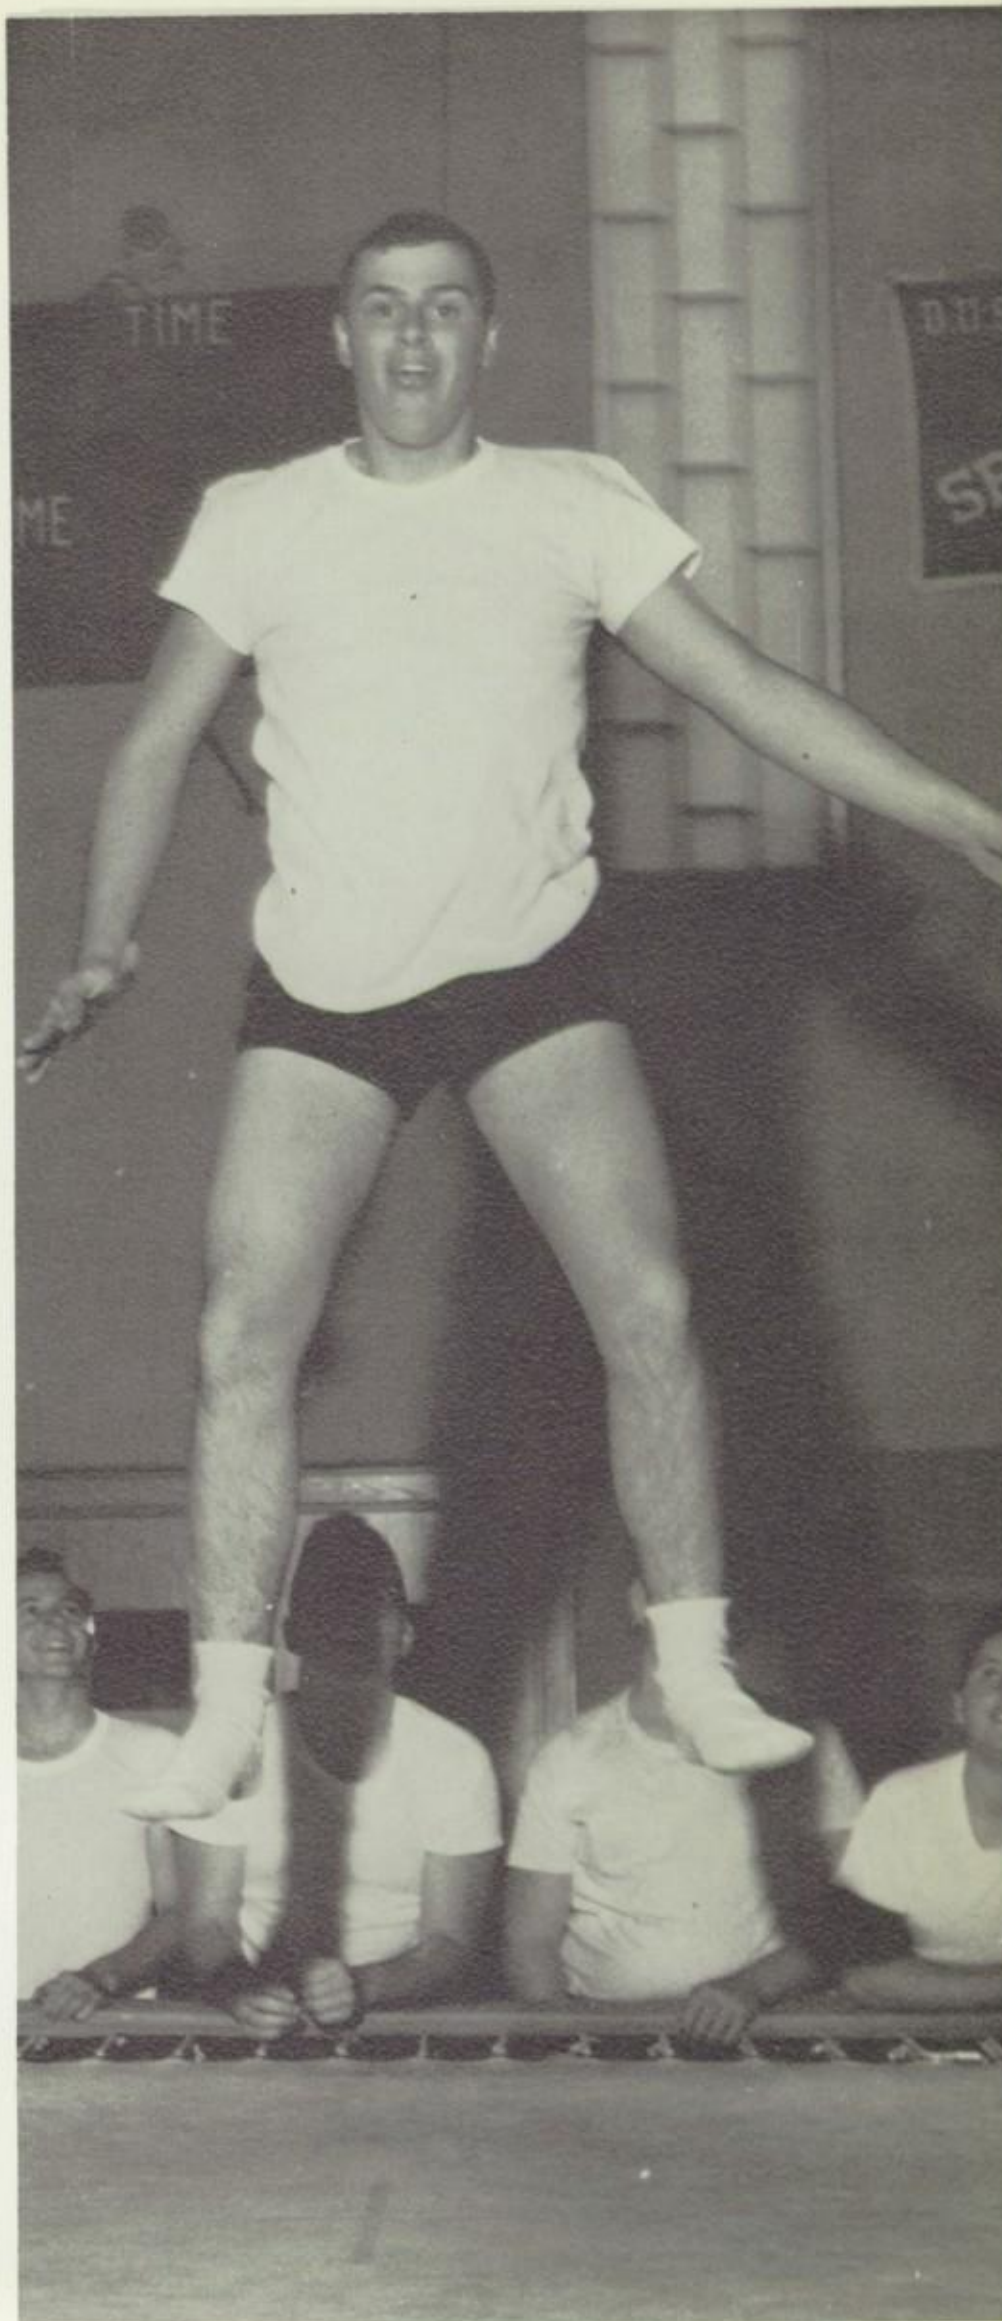

The purpose of driver training is to put cautious and competent drivers on the road. Students who have taken this course should be better prepared to drive on the open highway, park on Front Street, or travel slowly through a school zone. Therefore, through knowledge and experience, driver training seeks to produce better drivers and thus make driving an enjoyable and useful skill.

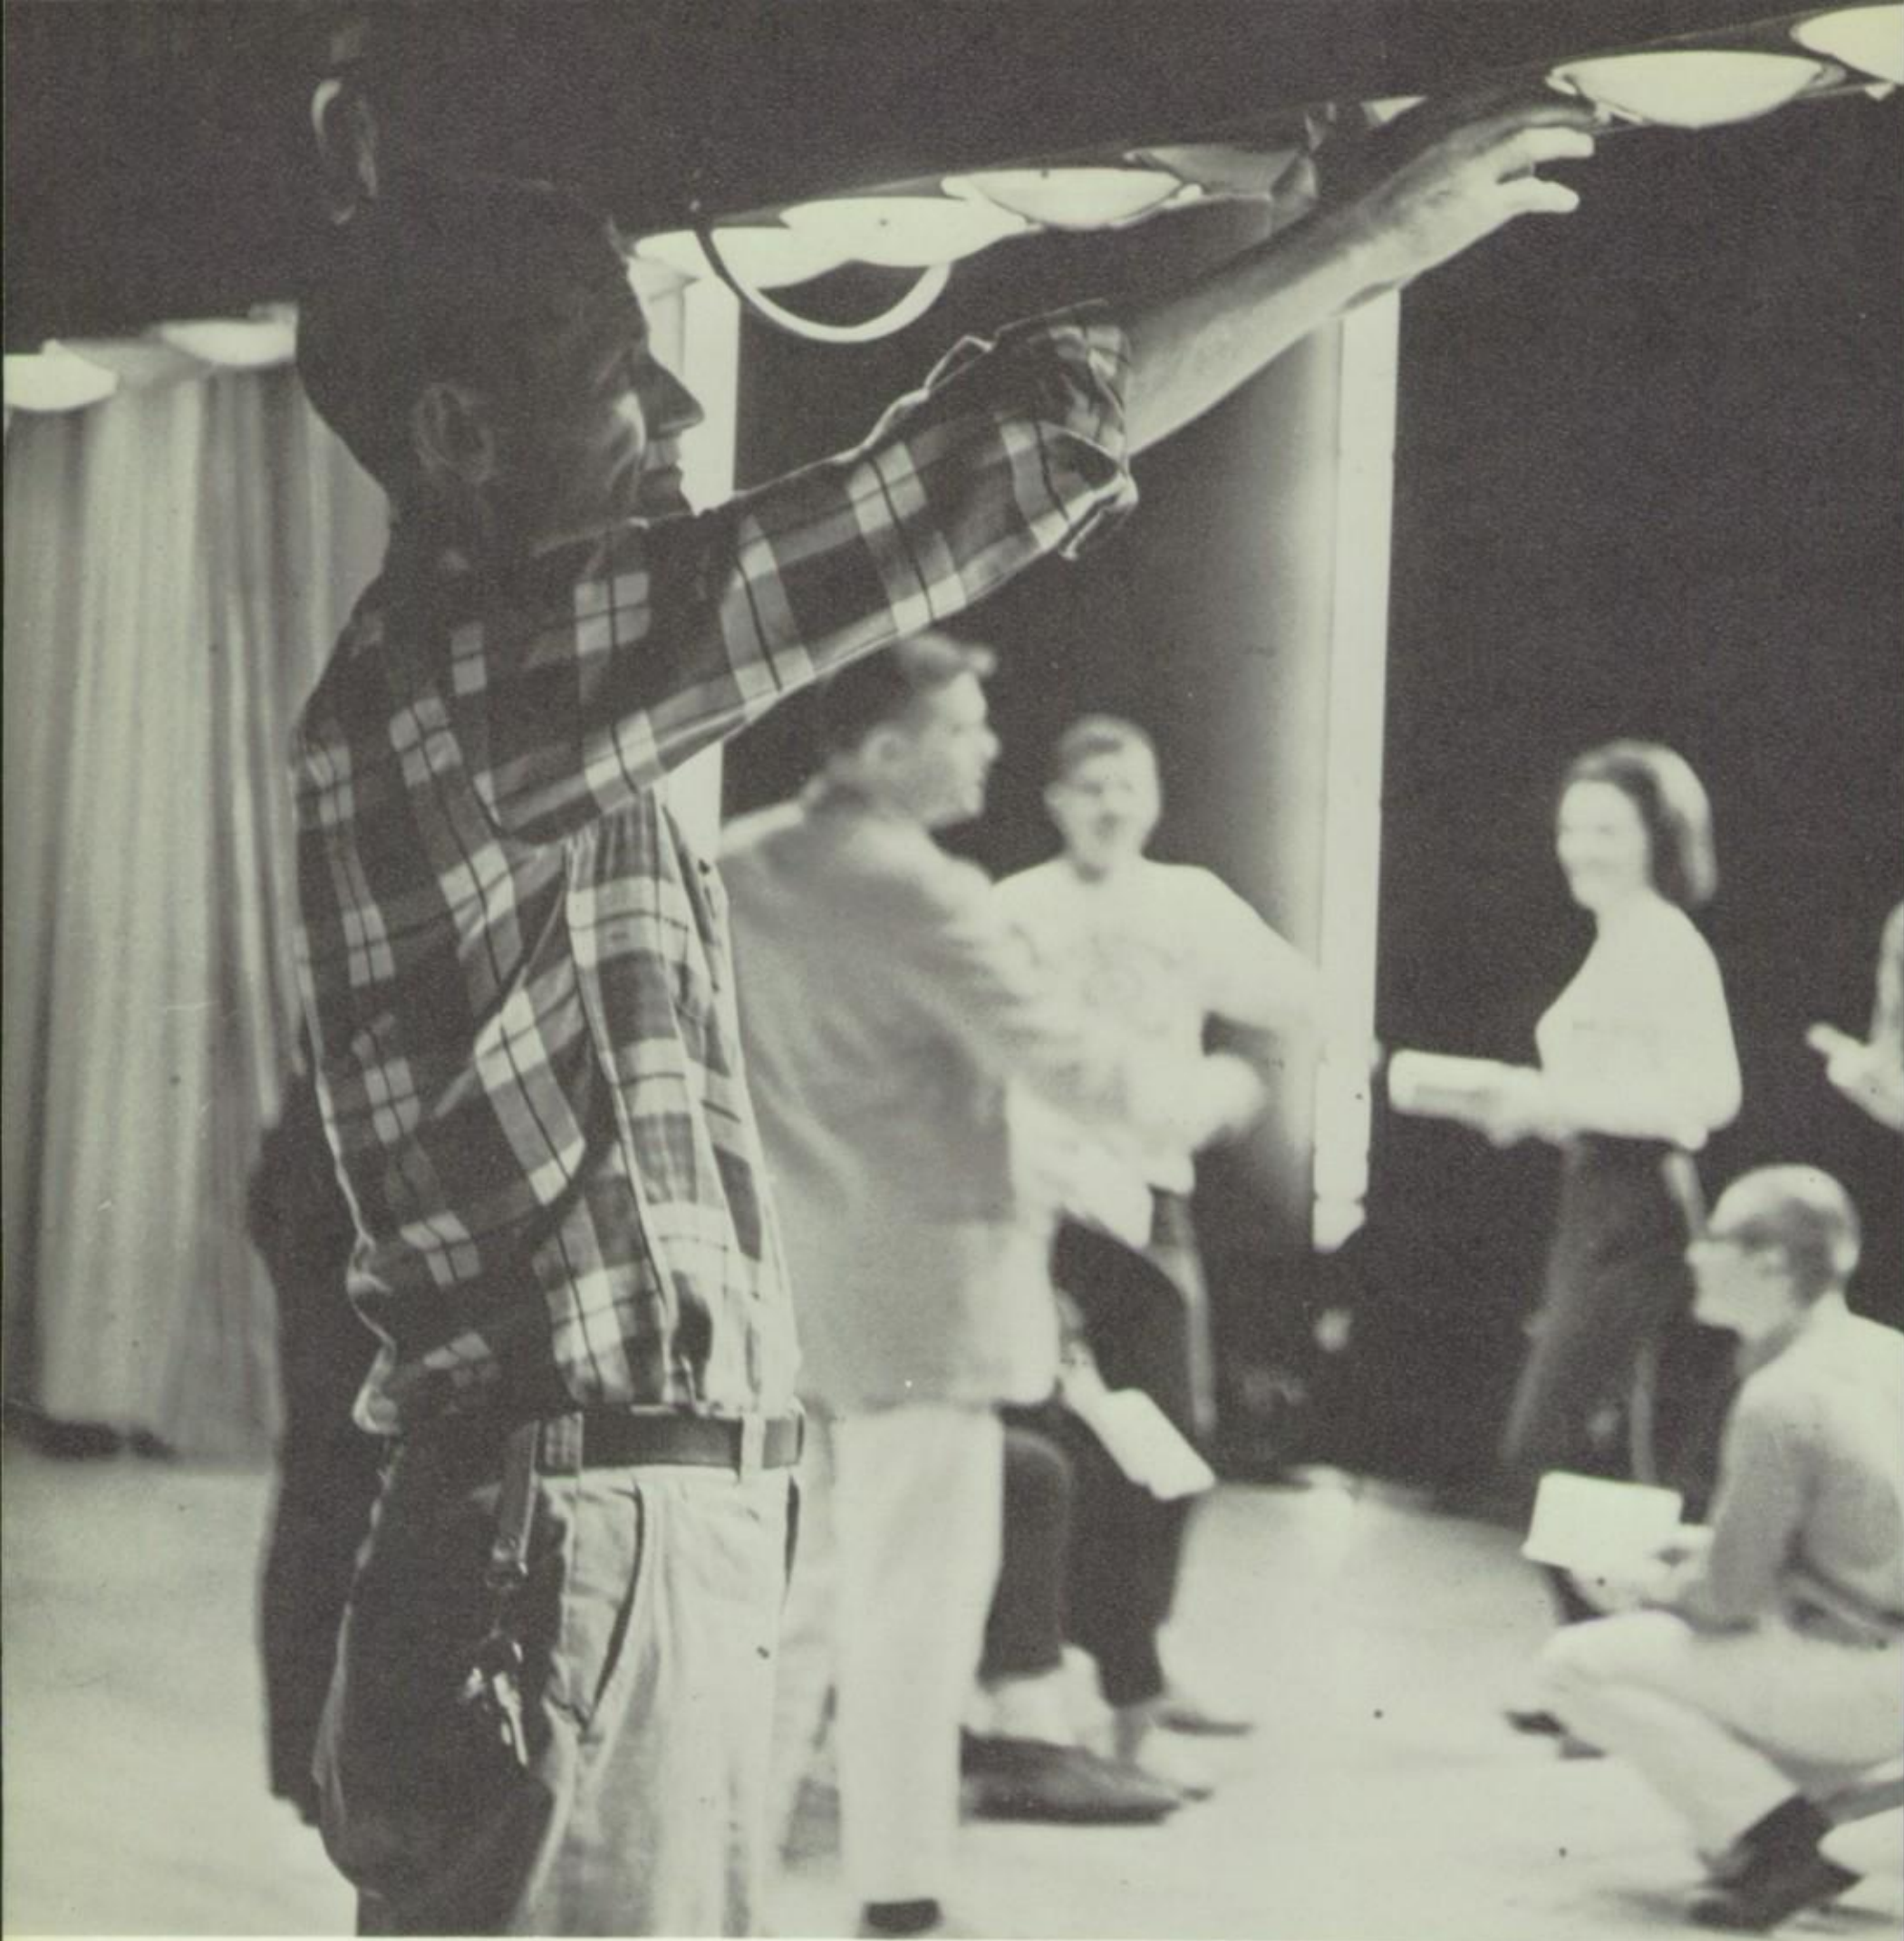

Physical education, known to all of us as gym, is both a necessary and an enjoyable course. It teaches us athletic and physical skills and provides time for relaxing recreation.

At the beginning of this year, all the students were run through a gamut of tests designed to determine our physical fitness. From there, individual students were urged to work on their particular weaknesses and improve their scores. Each class then entered into a succession of activities which included basketball, volleyball, and practicing on the trampoline. With the coming of spring, physical education moved outside, and we all enjoyed track or softball.

Whether bouncing on the trampoline or throwing a ball, gym taught us sportsmanship and skills, and gave us a relaxing fifty minutes away from desks and books. Therefore, this course proved very useful and lots of fun.

Probably the most amusing activity in gym class is the trampoline. Dick Westbrook struggles to keep his balance as he bounces up into the air.

One of the favorite acts in the talent show was a skit about the P. J. baseball team ending in the song, "You've Gotta Have Heart." Linda Neenan, Maria Cordisco, Sue Chichester, and JoAnn Crine finish the number with outstretched arms and open mouths.

A can of food, a dancing couple, and a piano solo--all results of a Student Council activity. The Student Council is a place for airing views, complaints, and suggestions. Its purpose is to promote and improve school activities, and to encourage student participation in the operation of our school. The Council, as a whole, meets every other Monday alternating with an executive meeting. Each homeroom elects a representative and an alternate to represent that room at the meetings. This year's Council, under the guidance of advisor Mrs. La Rue and president Linda Faller, has accomplished many of its goals.

The annual food drive, sponsored by the Student Council, was a big success. Although all the homerooms worked hard, the banner for collecting the most cans went to the Homemaking Room. The U.N.I. C.E.F. Drive also brought in much money which will be used for helping underprivileged children. In addition, the Council has tried to expand its social activities. Three dances and a sock-hop were held, and all were well-attended and enjoyed by many students. A talent show was produced and presented, both at a student assembly and in the evening for parents and friends. The acts were many and varied--from comic skits to a harmonica solo. Yet all the performances allowed us to see the accomplishments and talents of many of our students.

The Student Council also took an interest in school spirit and sports. This year the Council founded a Pep Club and then worked closely with this organization to encourage participation in school activities. The Pep Club, in conjunction with the Council's goals, also sold pep tags to earn money for purchasing a football scoreboard. In addition, the Council arranged and took care of the trophy case.

This year's Council promoted new ventures and, at the same time, carried on many old goals. It worked hard to be an important school organization and to represent the student body in opinion and thought.

YEARBOOK - ARCHIVES - 1965

A photo was hastily cropped and labeled. The last pages of copy were packaged and stamped. The 1965 Archives was completed at last.

The 1965 Archives was a product of co-ordination and effort by many people. Under Editor Larry Simon, the staff was, for the first time, expanded to include sophomores and juniors. This gave the underclassmen an opportunity to learn the fundamentals of yearbook production. By the time they become seniors, it is hoped they will be able to produce an even better book. The expansion truly made the Archives a school yearbook, not just a senior class project. In all, close to one hundred students participated in the yearbook's production.

The work that goes into a yearbook is varied as well as plentiful. Many skills are required and used. They range from salesmanship to sell ads, boosters, and the books themselves, to typing, the ability to write copy, and an artistic sense for creating. Above all, there must be co-ordination so that all the committees and work are ready in time for the deadline.

With the patience and suggestions of the advisor, Mr. Rifkin, the yearbook leaves a record of the students, their activities and successes. It reminds students and graduates of their past accomplishments.

NEWSPAPER - THE RAIDER

Co-editors, Carol Norris and Mary Daly, check one of the past issues of the Raider as they plan the layout for the next paper.

"Junior Prom, Big Success," "1964 Archives Takes First Place," "Scholarship Winners Announced." The staff of the Raider was always on the go, looking for news. No school event slipped by their complete coverage.

Membership on the Raider staff was open to the entire school. Anyone could serve on the staff or contribute to the paper. This enabled many students to obtain invaluable experience in journalism, a field not covered in English classes.

The Raider is issued monthly not only to students, but also to Port Jervis residents. In co-ordination with the local paper, the Union Gazette, the Raider is distributed throughout the city. In this way, adults, as well as students, are kept up to date on student news and opinion.

The 1964 Raider was so outstanding that it was awarded a first place in The Columbia Scholastic Press Association Contest. This year the Raider staff has again strived for this honor.

School Mourns Miss Harris' Death

Miss Evelyn Harris

Miss Harris: Dedicated To Learning and Teaching

A very familiar and well-remembered name will be forever missing from our school walls. For many years, Miss Evelyn Harris has been teaching in the Fort Jervis High School, being of our people and our people's pride and honor.

Columbia University which she attended in 1935.

She was such a dedicated teacher that in 1938 she received a master's degree in education. This is a high thing to be in the field of education and it is always a well-deserved reward and honor to her.

Her Students Are Her Living Legacy

By KAREN MATTHEWS

Death leaves a void in the hearts of those who have known her. Her students are her living legacy. They have learned from her the value of learning and the importance of education.

She was a dedicated teacher and a dedicated person. She was a woman of many talents and a woman of many virtues. She was a woman who was loved by all who knew her.

Miss Harris as student teacher in the front. She was grateful for year book dedication.

The President of the Senior Class

Fort Jervis, N.Y.

Dear Mr. President:
A few days before my senior, I wrote, passed to you a letter very brief, asking you to dedicate your forthcoming yearbook to me. I am sure that you will be able to do so.

The December, 1964, issue of the Raider expressed the sorrow of the entire school at the death of Miss Evelyn Harris.

The First Place Certificate the Raider won at last year's C.S.P.A. Contest proved the outstanding quality of the paper.

LITERARY MAGAZINE - THE LAMP

Literature and art are means of expression. They enable us to communicate our thoughts, emotions, and opinions to others. In order for a writer and an artist to show his thoughts, his work must be exposed to the public. The Lamp, the school literary magazine, serves this purpose. It enables students to express themselves through poetry, essays, short stories, and art. Published in one volume this year, The Lamp contained over forty pages of literature and art produced by the student body.

Editor-in-Chief Phyllis Goldman checks some art work submitted to her for use in The Lamp.

NATIONAL HONOR SOCIETY

This year, fourteen more members were inducted into an organization existing for the purpose of promoting the qualities of scholarship, character, leadership, and service. This organization is the Minisink chapter of the National Honor Society. To help realize these goals, it sponsors several trips a year in addition to urging students to maintain a high scholastic standing. By providing a cultural environment and by setting elevated academic standards, the National Honor Society hopes to instill its principles in the student body of our school, producing, in the end, people worthy of honor.

Officers of the Honor Society for 1964-65 are as follows:

Wrong notes, not-quite hit high B-flats, and the same eight measure phrase sung over and over again are characteristic of the practice sessions of the vocal groups. But each year, the A-Cappella Choir, Boys' Glee Club and Girls' Glee Club under the direction of Mr. Carl Lester, surmount these difficulties, and present, in the winter and spring, two concerts. During the course of the school year, these groups also put on performances for the student body and faculty.

BAND

The conductor brought down his arm and the band burst into sound. A first down-beat and a first note, thus, started another eventful year. Beginning with the football season, the band made several appearances. Each of the games was spirited by its beat, and the half time shows varied throughout the season. Assemblies, plus the Christmas concert, brought out yet another facet of the band in a more tranquil style.

Throughout the winter, new and exciting numbers were played for assemblies. The main concern of the band was in preparing for the concert at the World's Fair in May and the subsequent Spring Concert.

Having had a most productive year, commencement exercises saw the last of this year's fine senior musicians; they will indeed be missed

MAJORETTES

As with the football and basketball teams, the cheering squads can recall both good times and bad times. They remember the touchdown which gave Port Jervis the D.U.S.O. Championship football title. And they can still see a Fallsburg basketball player make a winning basket just as the final buzzer sounds. But the Varsity squad, led by co-captains Linda Neenan and Sue Chichester, and the J.V. squad, led by captain Pat Rooney, were never disheartened. They yelled as loud as they could when their team was winning and even louder when it wasn't.

At football games, a good half time show always boosts the spirits of the crowd. And, no one can give a livelier half time show than the Port Jervis majorettes.

In co-ordination with the band, the majorettes patiently worked out routines for a variety of numbers, from "Hello Dolly" to "Turkey in the Straw." Practice and effort were responsible for their success in putting on the shows. Bravely they learned to twirl their fire batons, to throw them up into the air and catch them again. In parades, too, the band is always led by the squad of majorettes stepping smartly in time with the music. Led by head majorette, Paula Grathwohl, the majorettes never disappointed the crowd.

THANKSGIVING DAY QUEEN

The Thanksgiving season brings excitement for many. Football players remember a grueling game, the band remembers a half-time show, fans remember a spectacular play, students remember a bonfire and an assembly, and six girls remember the crowns and chrysanthemums of the Thanksgiving Day Queen and her court.

The senior boys, according to tradition, nominated six girls, one of whom would be crowned queen and would reign over the Port-Middie game. Pat Hazleton, JoAnn Crine, Linda Faller, Karen Mateyak, Marie Calvario, and Susan Chichester, as well as the whole student body, waited in suspense for the announcement after the election. Finally, at the pre-game pep assembly, with loud and approving cheers and whistles, Linda Faller was crowned Thanksgiving Day Queen.

Linda Faller unsuccessfully attempts to hold back her tears as Mr. Lloyd announces that she has been elected Thanksgiving Day Queen.

There were glittering stars overhead. The band was playing soft, romantic music. Everything was perfect for an evening in Shangri-La.

THE JUNIOR-SENIOR PROM, SHANGRI-LA

What can be more important at a Prom than a band? Their music marks the end result of months of frenzied work by junior girls.

"Afraid of a mouse?" Leading man, Mike Castle, shakes in fear as the little animal scurries under his chair—a typical example of the modern American male as portrayed in A Night with Conrad Seiler.

Many things happen before the curtain goes up. Mrs. Luger, make-up advisor, adds the finishing touches to Cathy Chant's eyebrows.

A stage, a group of seniors, and a director, Mr. Jack Donnelly, made A Night with Conrad Seiler complete. Composed of three one-act plays, "Why I Am a Bachelor," "The Stronger Sex," and "What's Wrong with the Girls," the production proved to be rollicking comedy with a poignant message.

Each play was introduced by a lecturer, including Bob Grawi, John Aber, and John Almborg, who presented their views on domineering wives, inlaw troubles, and the working woman. Their statements were backed up by live scenes and pantomime performances portraying past and present situations. In the third act we finally got a look at the woman's point of view when Sue Chichester, as Miss Duckworth, Ph.D., demanded a chance to express her opinion. Using an actor, an actress, and sarcastic wit, Miss Duckworth told what's wrong with the boys and with the help of her feminine charms won even Professor Coots, the lecturer, over to her way of thinking.

A Night with Conrad Seiler brought out many flaws, attributes, and humorous aspects of both men and women. Yet most important of all, for both actors and audience, this evening was a pleasing experience and an enjoyable Night with Conrad Seiler.

Cast, "Why I Am a Bachelor", Lecturer, Robert Grawi; Henrietta, Marie Calvario; Agernon, John Aber; Henrietta's Mother, Colette Jones; Aunt Emma, Cheryl Heater; Ida May, Karen Skramstad; "The Stronger Sex", Speaker, John Aber; Voice, Stanley Siegel; Elliot Winslow Pennypacker, Robert Roland; Ursula Pennypacker, Linda Neenan; Clarence Scudd, Mike Castle; Geraldine Scudd, Terri Vecchio; "What's Wrong with the Girls", Chairman, Neal Kaplan; Professor Coots, John Almborg; First Actor, Robert Grawi; First Actress, Cathy Chant; Miss Duckworth, Sue Chichester; Second Actor, Mike Castle; Second Actress, Jane Mungoven; Voices, Cindy Murray; Sandra Bensley; Beverly Lapriore.

Portraying a typical wife at the turn of the century, Linda Neenan kneels submissively to her husband, Bob Roland, and begs forgiveness for having "burned his biscuits."

In a more modern vein, Mike Castle in his frilly apron attempts to prepare a satisfactory breakfast for his domineering, dungaree-sporting wife, Terri Vecchio.

SCIENCE CLUB

Science is more than Galileo's telescope and Newton's Laws of Motion. It also involves modern concepts of speed, recent breakthrough in cancer research, and facts about the atom. The Science Club tries to keep interested students up to date with the rapid progress of science.

At each meeting, a member of the club presents a lecture on an area of science in which he is interested and in which he has done outside research. The topics vary from the theory of relativity to the quantum theory to the transmutation of knowledge in paramecium. A person can demonstrate an experiment or project or merely give a talk and try to answer any questions the other members may ask. These lectures afford Science Club members the opportunity to increase their knowledge and understanding of more specific areas of interest than generally covered in school.

The major project of the Science Club is the annual science fair held in the spring. In the fair, students of grades seven through twelve exhibit projects which they have worked on outside of school. The purpose of the fair is to promote more individual experimentation by students. It is hoped that a true appreciation of science will be developed. This year the fair was opened to projects not only in science but also in art, industrial arts, home-making, and photography. By doing this, the science club hoped to increase student interest and participation in worthwhile projects in many areas.

Infinites and relativity are the topics of discussion in the science club. Here Neal Kaplan, president, presents a lecture on new developments in science.

POLITICAL SCIENCE CLUB

Although current international and national problems are discussed in history classes, there is not enough time to study them thoroughly. As a result, the political Science club has been formed.

The purpose of the political science club is to explore and evaluate the impending crises of today's world. These problems are examined through both free discussion and formal debates. The topics used at meetings are chosen by the club members, each of whom is responsible for a topic at a particular meeting.

There is no limit placed on the subjects which can be discussed. This year, the topics have ranged from the senatorial race to teenage suicide. Through this club, students are better able to comprehend the changing world they live in.

JUNIOR COLLEGE CLUB

Why should I go to college? What college is best for me? Will I get in? The Junior College Club, under the guidance of Mr. Shaw, meets every other Wednesday to discuss these questions and to try to find answers.

The members talk about the importance of college and the problems confronting students who plan to enter college. They discuss their chances for competition in college entrance examinations and how their present marks stand. They attempt to discover new information on how to choose the right college for themselves. The purpose of this discussion is to better prepare juniors for the important decisions they will have to make next year.

FUTURE NURSES CLUB

Nursing is personal satisfaction, but also tired feet, rewarding experiences, but also hard work--certainly not the glamorous profession of movies and books.

The Future Nurses Club was started to give girls who plan to go into nursing an opportunity to look beyond the glamour and to learn more about their proposed vocation.

Under the leadership of Miss Margaret Doyle and Miss Howland, the school nurse and dental hygienist, the club held meetings regularly and carried on many activities.

At Christmas time, members of the club went to the two local hospitals where they helped deliver mail and passed out flowers. A campaign against smoking was organized in school. Bulletin boards in the halls were decorated with anti-smoking information, and it was hoped that a general campaign might lessen the number of students who engage in this harmful habit.

Some of the girls who really enjoy nursing took the Nurses' Aid Course at St. Frances Hospital. After completing the course, they will be able to do volunteer work in the hospitals.

The Future Nurses Club is a successful organization not only because it has been quite active, but also because it affords interested girls useful and enjoyable activity as well as valuable information.

The officers of the club this year were Beverly Lapriore, president; Linda Sutton, vice-president; Josephine Durland, secretary; Gail Haring, treasurer; and Cynthia Cummings, social chairman.

INDUSTRIAL ARTS CLUB

With blow torch and goggles, Bill Decker welds a piece of metal and completes part of an Industrial Arts project.

The Industrial Arts Club is a bridge between school and industry. Its purpose is to investigate the way skills learned in the school's industrial arts courses are used in our nation's industries. Factories are visited and community projects undertaken. Both of these activities give the club members a chance to learn about and help promote the industry of this area.

Once a month, the members of the Industrial Arts Club congregate in the shop for their regular meeting. The man at the controls is President Lou Tunno. The other officers are Vice-President, Tony Sicuro; Secretary, Dick Conklin; and Treasurer, Jack Cunneen. The club is co-sponsored by Mr. Metcalfe and Mr. Gillings.

At the present time, the Industrial Arts Club is endeavoring to do several community projects and is planning several field trips to industries in the Tri-State area. All these activities teach the boys about industry and its connection with their school work and help prepare them for a career in the world of factories and machines.

The world of photography is fascinating. With a camera, one can capture the beauty, humor, or serenity of life. The photography club enables students to become a part of this world by giving them an opportunity to learn the basics of photography. This year, the club members learned how to develop their own films and make prints. Advisor John Metcalfe told them the secrets of taking clear, interesting photos. In order to promote interest in photography among the members, the photography club held a contest at the annual science fair. This enabled students to show others what a camera and a little skill can accomplish.

SPORTSMEN'S CONSERVATION CLUB

Sounds of a forest waking up. The chill dew still fresh in the air and the warmth of the early morning sun. A sensation of anxious excitement as the forest is scanned for signs of game. These are feelings that all true sportsmen recognize. But to really enjoy them, sportsmen must know something else too, the proper use and conservation of our natural resources.

The programs of the Sportsmen Conservation Club teach its members wildlife preservation as well as the skills of an outdoorsman and the proper manner with which to handle equipment. As an outdoor project, club members helped stock several trout streams in the area. Several boys assisted in the construction of a Rod and Gun Clubhouse. Through these activities, boys acquire the appreciations and skills they will need as future sportsmen.

Building around a nucleus of thirteen returning lettermen, head football coach, Joe Viglione led his charges to a fine 6 and 2 season, which proved good enough for a three way tie for the Duso League championship. Port shared this honor with Middletown and Newburgh. Coach Viglione, who handled the backfield coaching chores, was ably assisted by Al Wilgard, the line mentor, and Junior Varsity Coaches Ron Moyer and Ed Chuckran.

The pro style offense, which had proved so effective the preceding season, was again the basis of Port's running and passing game. Making use of the speediest backfield in the league, Mr. Viglione organized an offense which depended largely on speed. Time after time the aptly named "Pony backs" showed their heels to enemy defensive players. Quarterback Rick Spears led the team brilliantly, calling the plays and either giving the ball to one of his speedy backs, or fading back for one of his accurate passes. The other backfield positions were filled by John Bell at set halfback, Elbert Wilkerson at fullback, and Bill Oliver at flanker back.

The offensive line, the "smashing seven", worked hard and well, opening holes to give the backs a route to paydirt. Holding down the center of the line was John MacKechnie, a standout throughout the season. Bill Hallock, a returning letterman, served as left guard and the right guard spot was filled by Dave Foster, a sophomore and one of Coach Wilgard's pleasant surprises. At left tackle, Tom Connelly turned in a fine job, while Bill Blasberg was equally effective in his right tackle position. Spear's favorite targets were ends Martin DeMond and Ed Rutan, who both has a fine season snagging passes.

The defensive team gained many plaudits this season and were often given credit for Port's impressive victories, as they produced three shut-outs. In the backfield, Rick Spears, Bill Oliver, Chuck Bierlein, and Martin DeMond turned in many jarring tackles and key interceptions. At the defensive end spots Bob DeVore and Ed Rutan did a fine job keying plays. The defensive tackles, Dave Simmons and Tom Connelly were especially impressive. Simmons was somewhat of a ball hawk, too, as he came up with seven opponents' fumbles, many of which set up key touchdowns. The middle guard position was filled alternately by Warren and George Gardner, both of whom did a fine job. Bill Hallock and John MacKechnie were outstanding in their line backer positions and usually led the team in tackles.

The Raiders started the season off slowly with a loss to Nyack, but came right back to post a six game winning streak. The high point of the season was the victory over a tough Newburgh eleven. After this come from behind win, a victory in the traditional Thanksgiving game with Middletown was needed to capture the DUSO League title. Port, however, lost in a hard fought game and had to settle for a three-way tie for the championship.

Coach Viglione calls for a substitute as the offense prepares to go in.

Port Jervis dominated the All-Duso team with seven choices. They were Ed Rutan, Bill Blasberg, Bill Hallock, John MacKechnie, John Bell, Rick Spears, and Dave Simmons. Dave Foster and Elbert Wilkerson got second team berths. Coach Viglione was lauded for his fine work as he was named "Coach of the Year" in the Duso League. An additional honor was awarded Rick Spears when he was given an honorable mention in Scholastic Coaches Magazine.

Piloted by head coach, Ed Chuckran, and line coach, Ron Moyer, the Junior Varsity Football Team had a fairly good season in 1964.

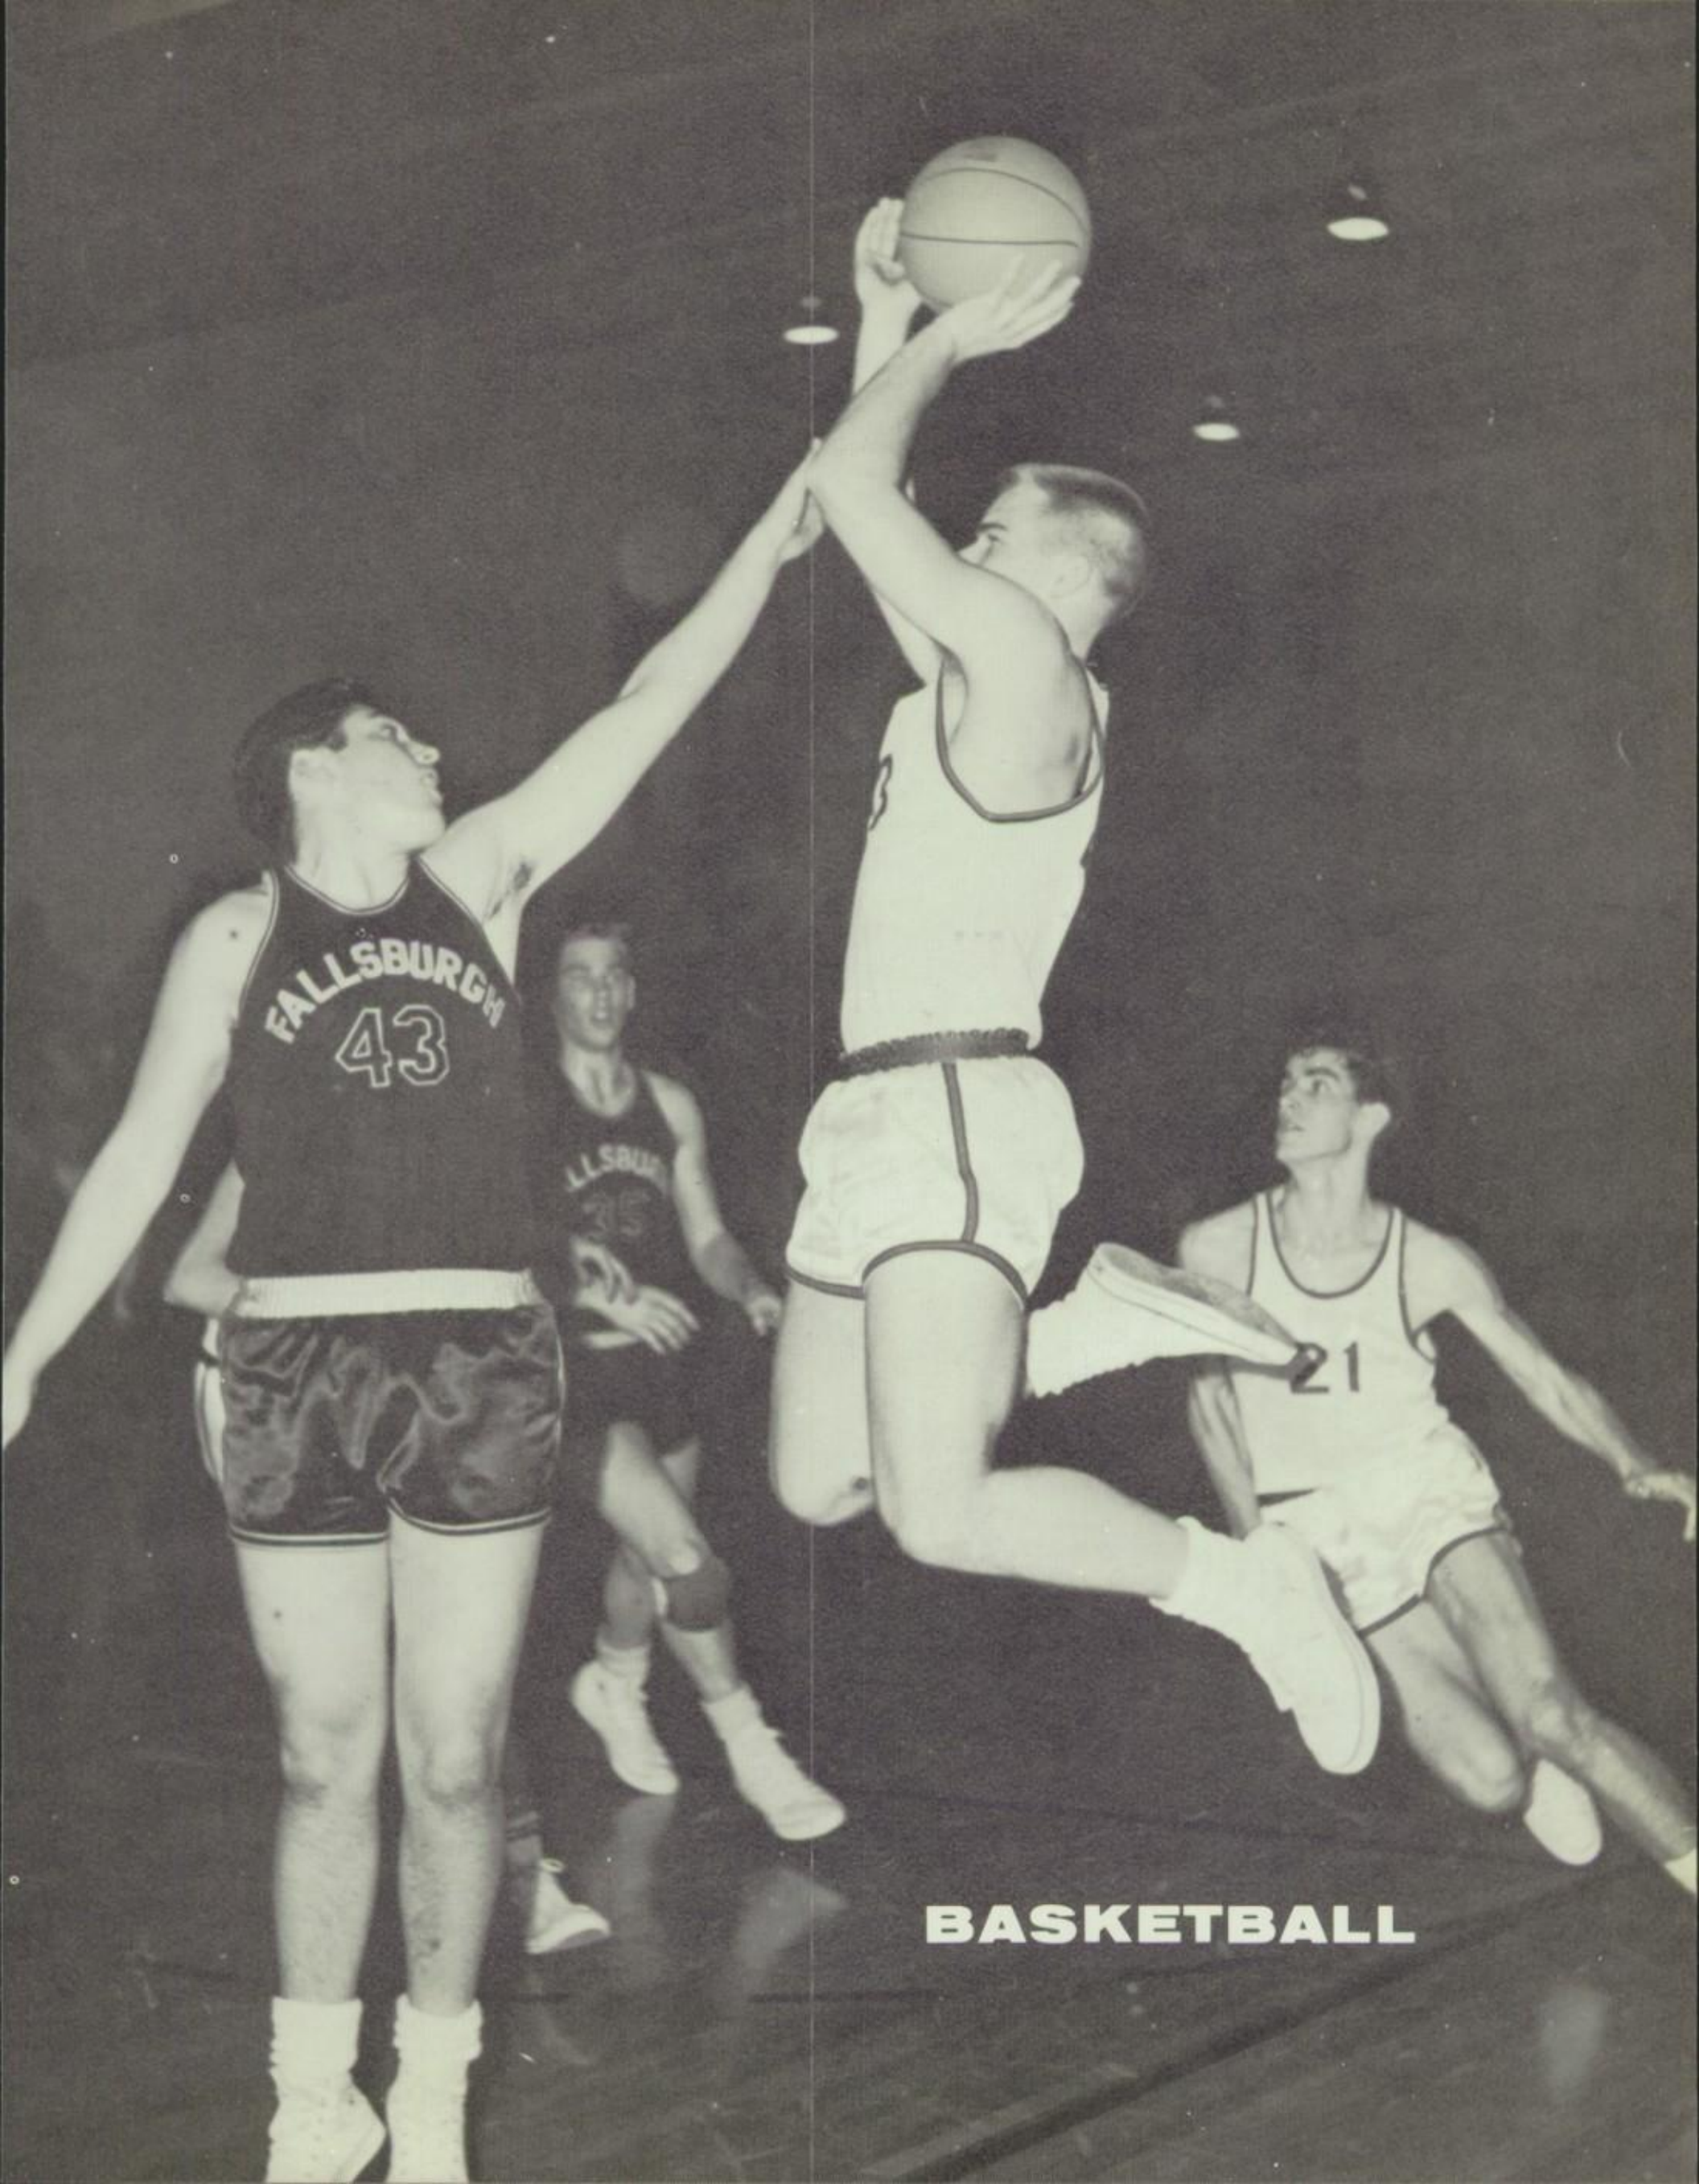

The season's record was four wins and five defeats. One of the losses, however, came at the hands of the varsity team from Ellenville.

The major problem that plagued the J. V.'s all season was their inability to settle down during the first half of a game. Nothing seemed to go right in the first half. After becoming organized in the second half, the Port squad was a match for any D.U.S.O. team.

"Sink it Mr. Spears!" "Take it away!" "Rebound, boys, rebound!" The 1964-1965 varsity basketball campaign will be remembered long after the shouts and feverish cheers of P.J. spectators have died out. This season was not like the ordinary. Almost every game hinged upon a last second play or a controversial official's decision. This season was one that disheartened fans as they watched the team go down to a last minute defeat.

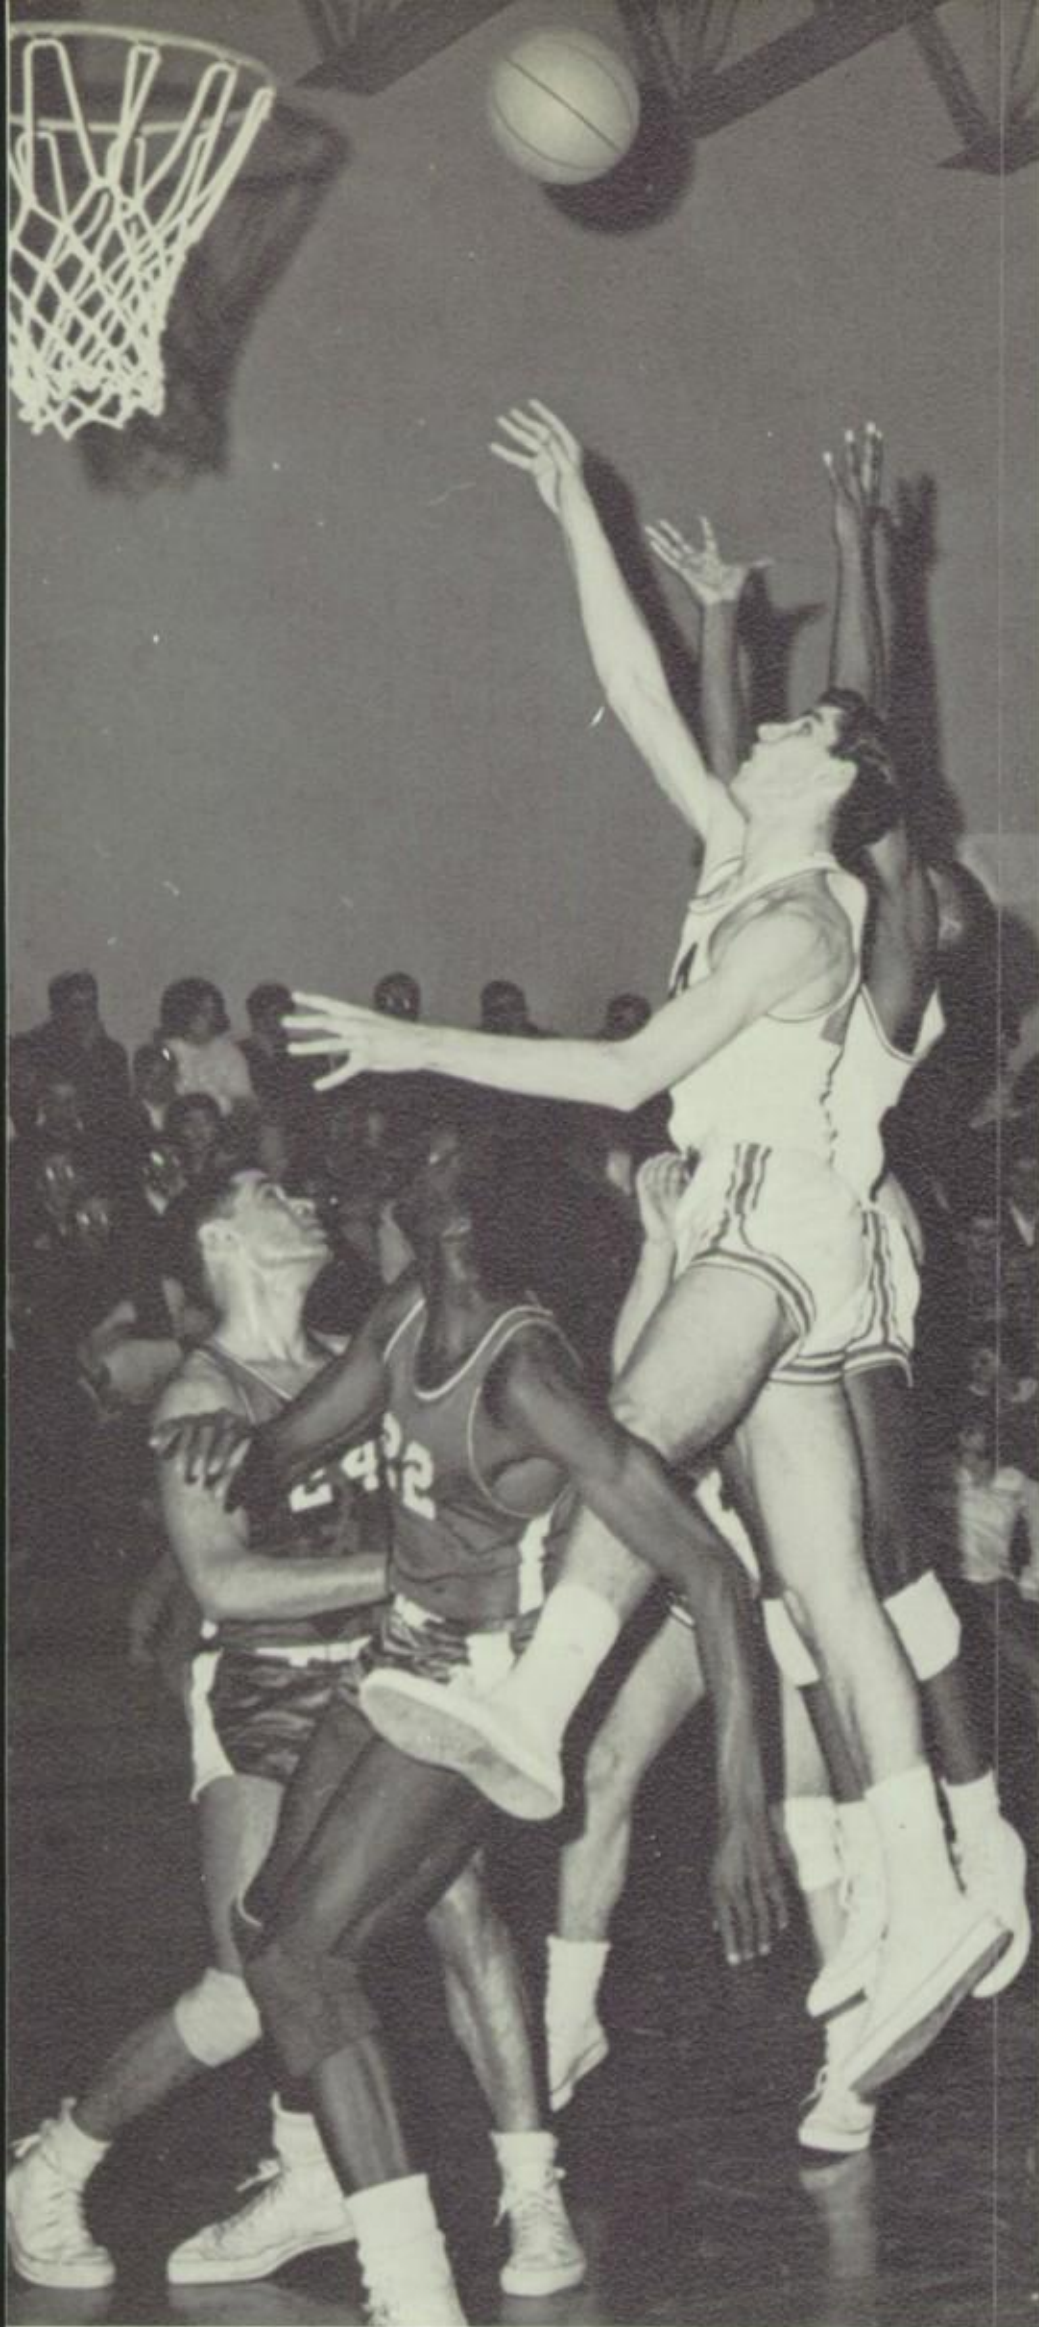

In fact the first Fallsburg game was decided by a shot that fell through the basket after the final period had ended. Typical of the 64-65 team's luck, the officials ruled the basket legal, and Port Jervis lost 63-62.

Another instance of their ill fortune was the home contest with Kingston. Our team went into the last thirty seconds with a three point lead yet managed to lose. After a last second basket made by Kingston, a Port player committed a foul simultaneous with the final buzzer. Then the Kingston player sank both of his shots, giving the game to Kingston. Time after time this "surprise ending" occurred.

Even with their hard luck, the Raiders managed to win a few close games, twice beating Liberty and once Middletown.

Also to the team's credit was their never-say-die spirit. The P. J. players went into each game with renewed determination and gave their opponent all they had. The 1964-1965 season was disappointing. But it was one which gave the team spirit and courage.

Amidst a tangle of arms and legs, Walt Lederhaas grabs for another rebound. The big center was Port's top rebounder this season.

This year's top scorer, Rick Spears, reaches for the hoop and lays up another two points for the Red Raiders.

Martin DeMond receives the players' handshakes before joining the time-out huddle to receive instructions from Coach Farace.

Hands clapping and voices yelling, Port cheerleaders lead the fans in support of the team during a tight game.

JUNIOR VARSITY BASKETBALL

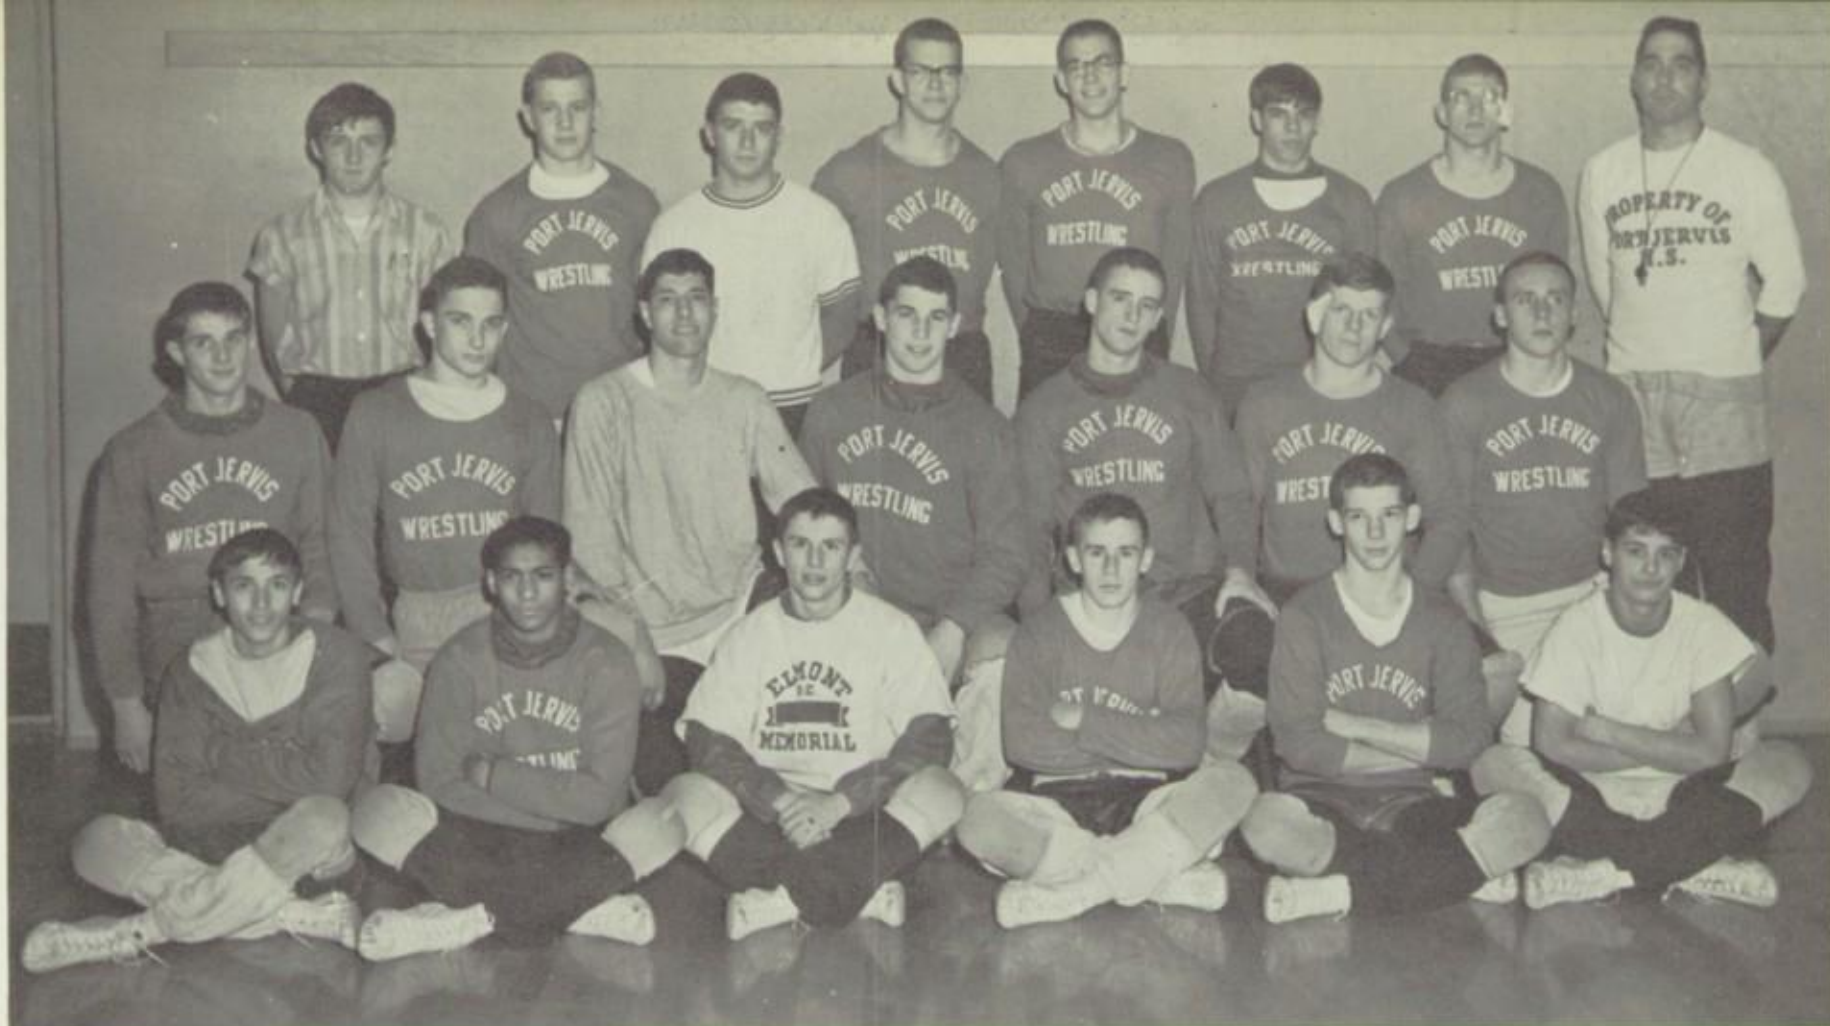

The Junior Varsity basketball team, like the Varsity, had a season of disappointment and hard luck in 1964-65. Under Coach Hugh Spangenberg, the team ended with a record of four wins and twelve losses, two of the losses coming in overtime. The team, usually outsized by opponents, always gave their all. It is hoped that the experience gained this year will aid the team to a better season in 65-66.

WRESTLING

It was a great season for the Port Jervis Wrestling Team. Organized during 1962-1963, the "grapplers" have achieved success at a phenomenal rate under Coach Al Wilgard's able direction. They were DUSO champions and runners-up at the OCCC Invitational Tournament last year. This season, behind a record of 8 and 1 in dual meets, the Raiders captured not only the DUSO League Championship, but also a first place in the DUSO tournament, an honor which they had been forced to relinquish the preceding year.

The first dual meet of the season brought the Raiders face to face with a tough Rockland County foe, Suffern. The Port men were forced to forfeit the 95 lb. match, and this proved the margin of victory, as Suffern won by a 22-17 score. Port then went on to win its next six meets, most of them by a wide margin of victory. This brought the season up to the OCCC Invitational Tournament in Middletown. The Port grapplers were unable to match their fine showing of the year before, but they managed a fifth place finish, and Mike Drapala and Tom Bayer brought back championships. The dual meets were completed when Kingston lost at Port, 44-10, after forfeiting four matches.

Undefeated in league competition, the Raiders were highly favored in the DUSO Tournament, and they lived up to this expectation. Their 103 points set a scoring record, and the finals looked like Port against the world, as there were Raiders in 10 of the 12 weight classes. Rich Santiago, Eric Keyes, Bill Oliver, Steve Drapala, and Mike Drapala were first place winners, while Tom Bayer, John Piccolo, Mark Faller, Bob DeVore, and Bill Blasberg took second. Bob Spada picked up a third to complete team scoring.

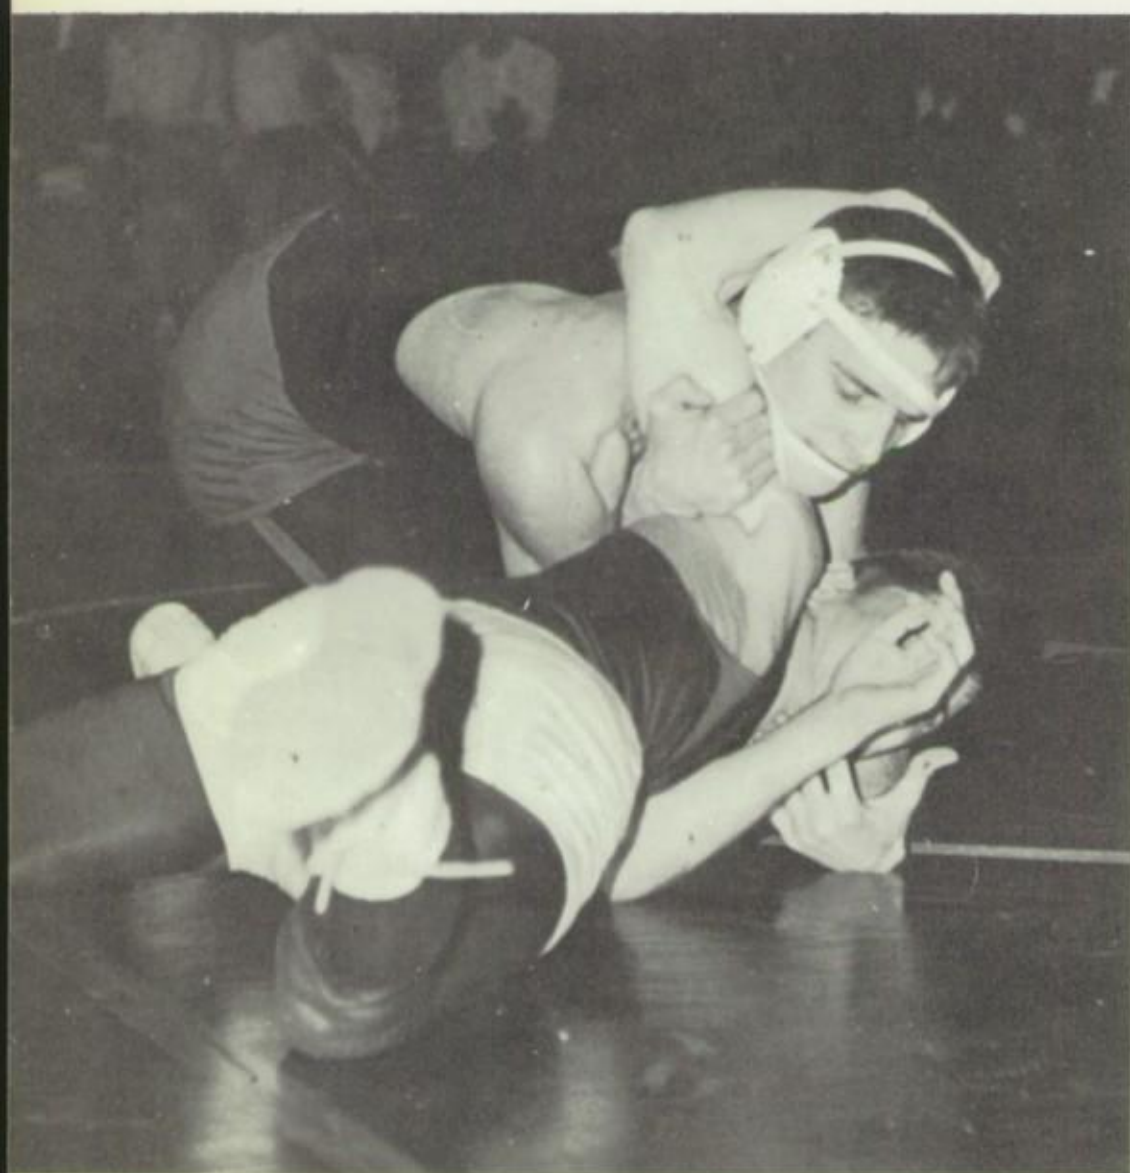

Seven out of the ten wrestlers who qualified for the Section 9 Tournament participated, and Mike Drapala brought home a first place, with Eric Keyes the proud winner of a second place. Mike went on to compete in the State meet, but due to an injury, was unable to continue after the first match.

All the members of the wrestling team did a fine job this year. Even those who did not get to wrestle very much worked hard in practice and will be ready to form a strong nucleus for next year's team.

CROSS COUNTRY

Late in the afternoon of many autumn days, people pause in their activities to watch a group of thirty or forty boys run along the sidewalks of Port Jervis. What they are watching is a cross country meet in action.

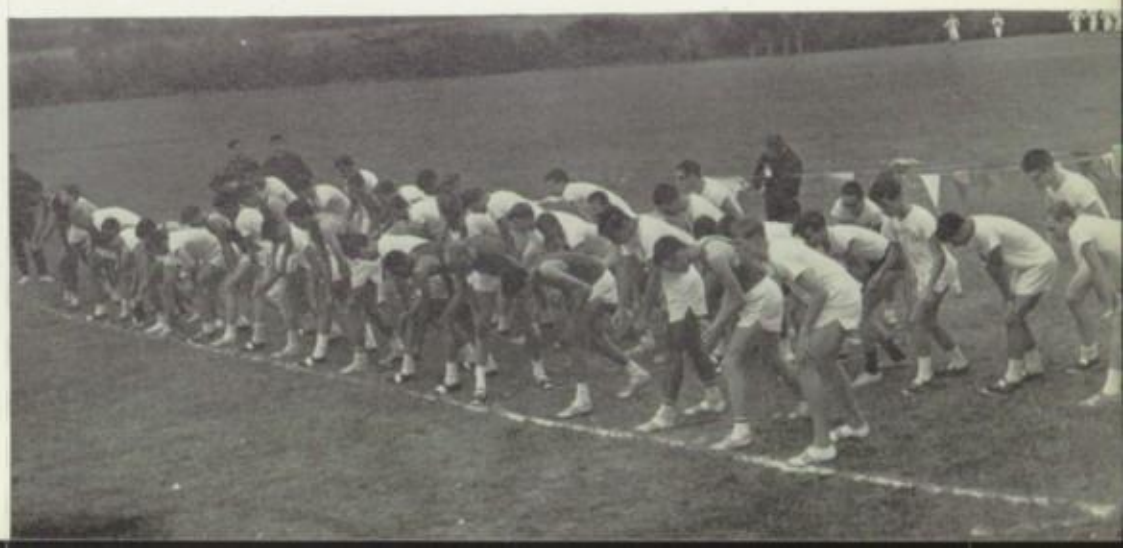

This year's cross country team, under the supervision of coach George Graeber, went undefeated throughout the regular season. This was the sport's best record in the school's history. Their seven straight wins included a victory over Kingston. The defeat was the first for Kingston in five years and broke a twenty-six meet winning streak.

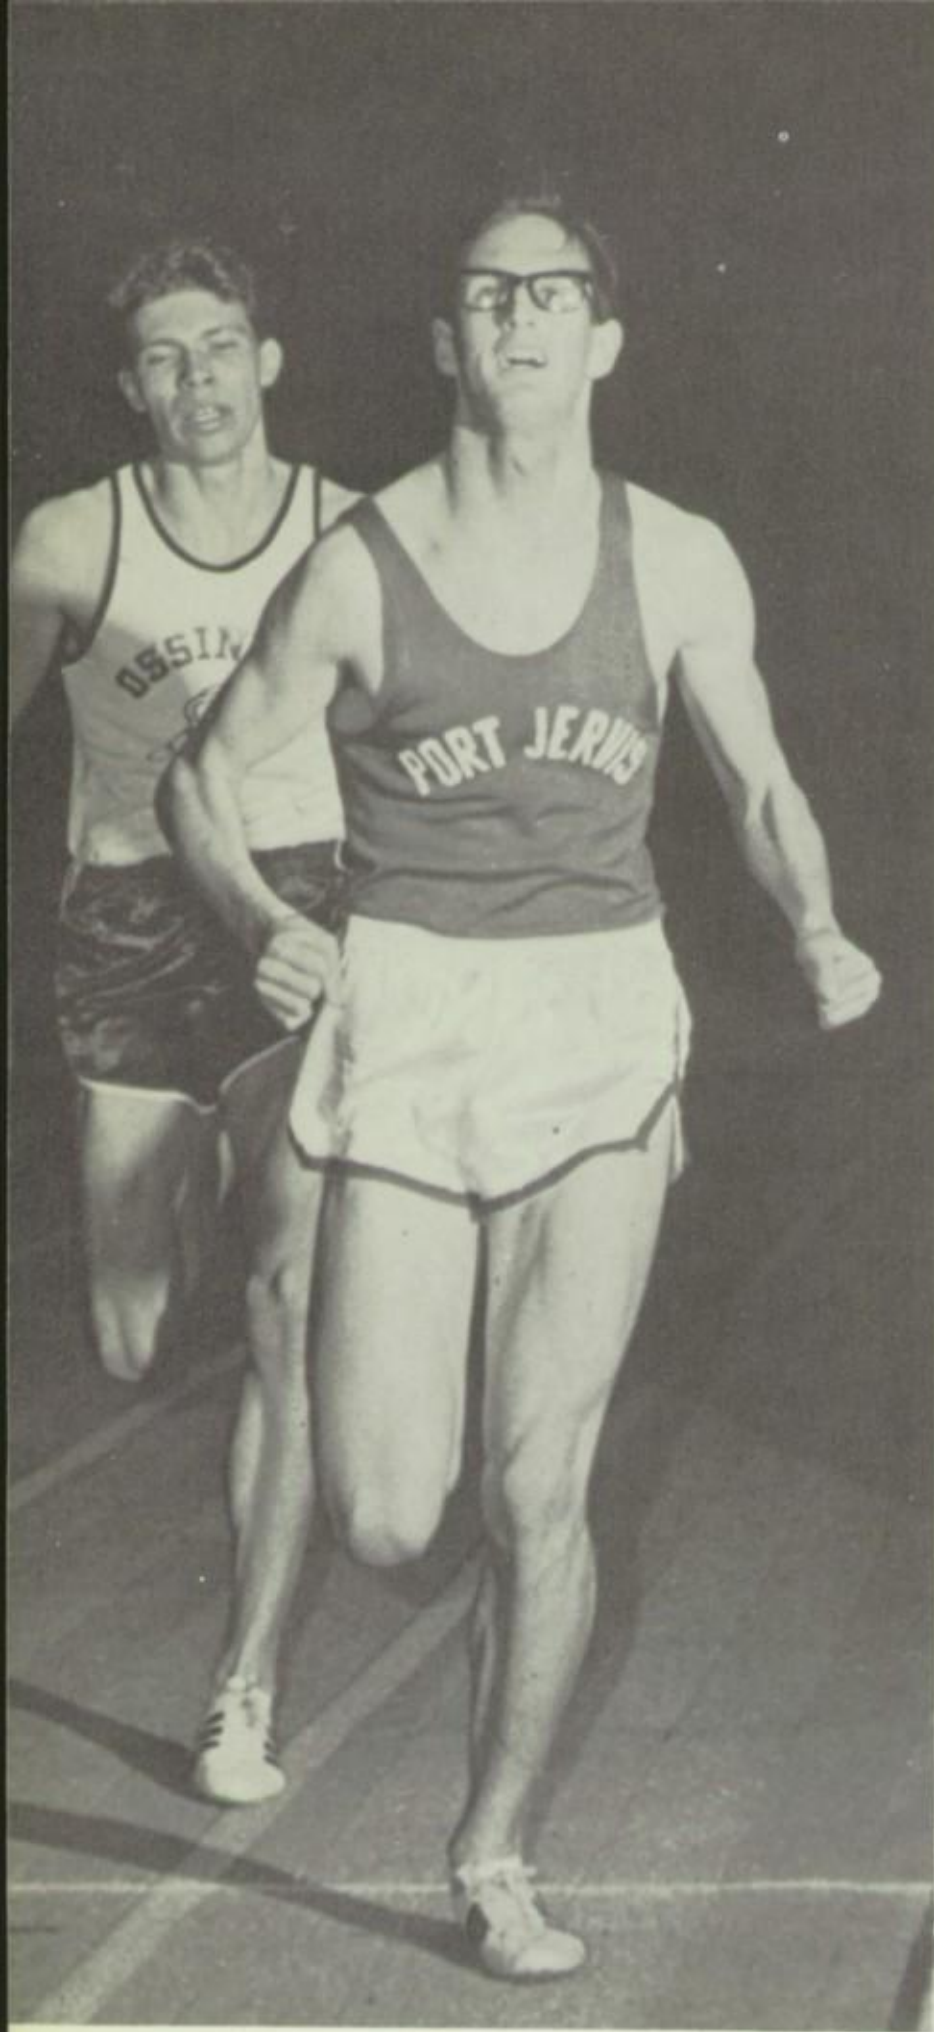

The Port course record was broken this year by the team's number one runner, John Kinney. The new mark of 10:17 was four seconds faster than the old one. Kinney also set a new record for the Monticello course.

The Red Raiders and their Kingston opponents await the sound of the gun and the start of the 2 1/2 mile race. The result of this meet was a major upset by the Raiders over the undefeated Kingston Harriers.

The Port harriers did not fare as well in the championship meets. They came in third in the DUSO meet and second in the Section Nine. Kinney and Nelson Keyes went on to the State meet where Kinney came in sixth and Keyes seventeenth.

Leg muscles bulging, miler John Kinney strains for the finish of the Nationals at Madison Square Garden.

Flying legs, carefully paced steps, and a cheering crowd are all part of an indoor track meet. This year, under the guidance of track coach, Gordon Short, a limited program of indoor track was initiated at P.J.H.S. Seniors Louis Stewart, Nelson Keyes, Terry Britt, John Kinney, and Junior Jerry Carlton were allowed to run in six indoor meets held in New York City and at West Point. Under tough competition and unfamiliar conditions, these five boys made a fine showing for Port Jervis.

The highpoint of the season came in the Westchester County games where Kinney ran a 4:18.8 mile. This was a meet record as well as a personal one for John. Carlton also had the fastest time of his career in the two-mile this season, 10:29 at the NYU meet.

Because of his fine mile runs, Kinney qualified to run in the high school portion of the National A.A.U. Meet held at Madison Square Garden. This contest attracts the best high school boy runners on the eastern seaboard. John took a fifth place with a 4:25 time to complete a fine indoor season.

GIRLS ATHLETIC ASSOCIATION

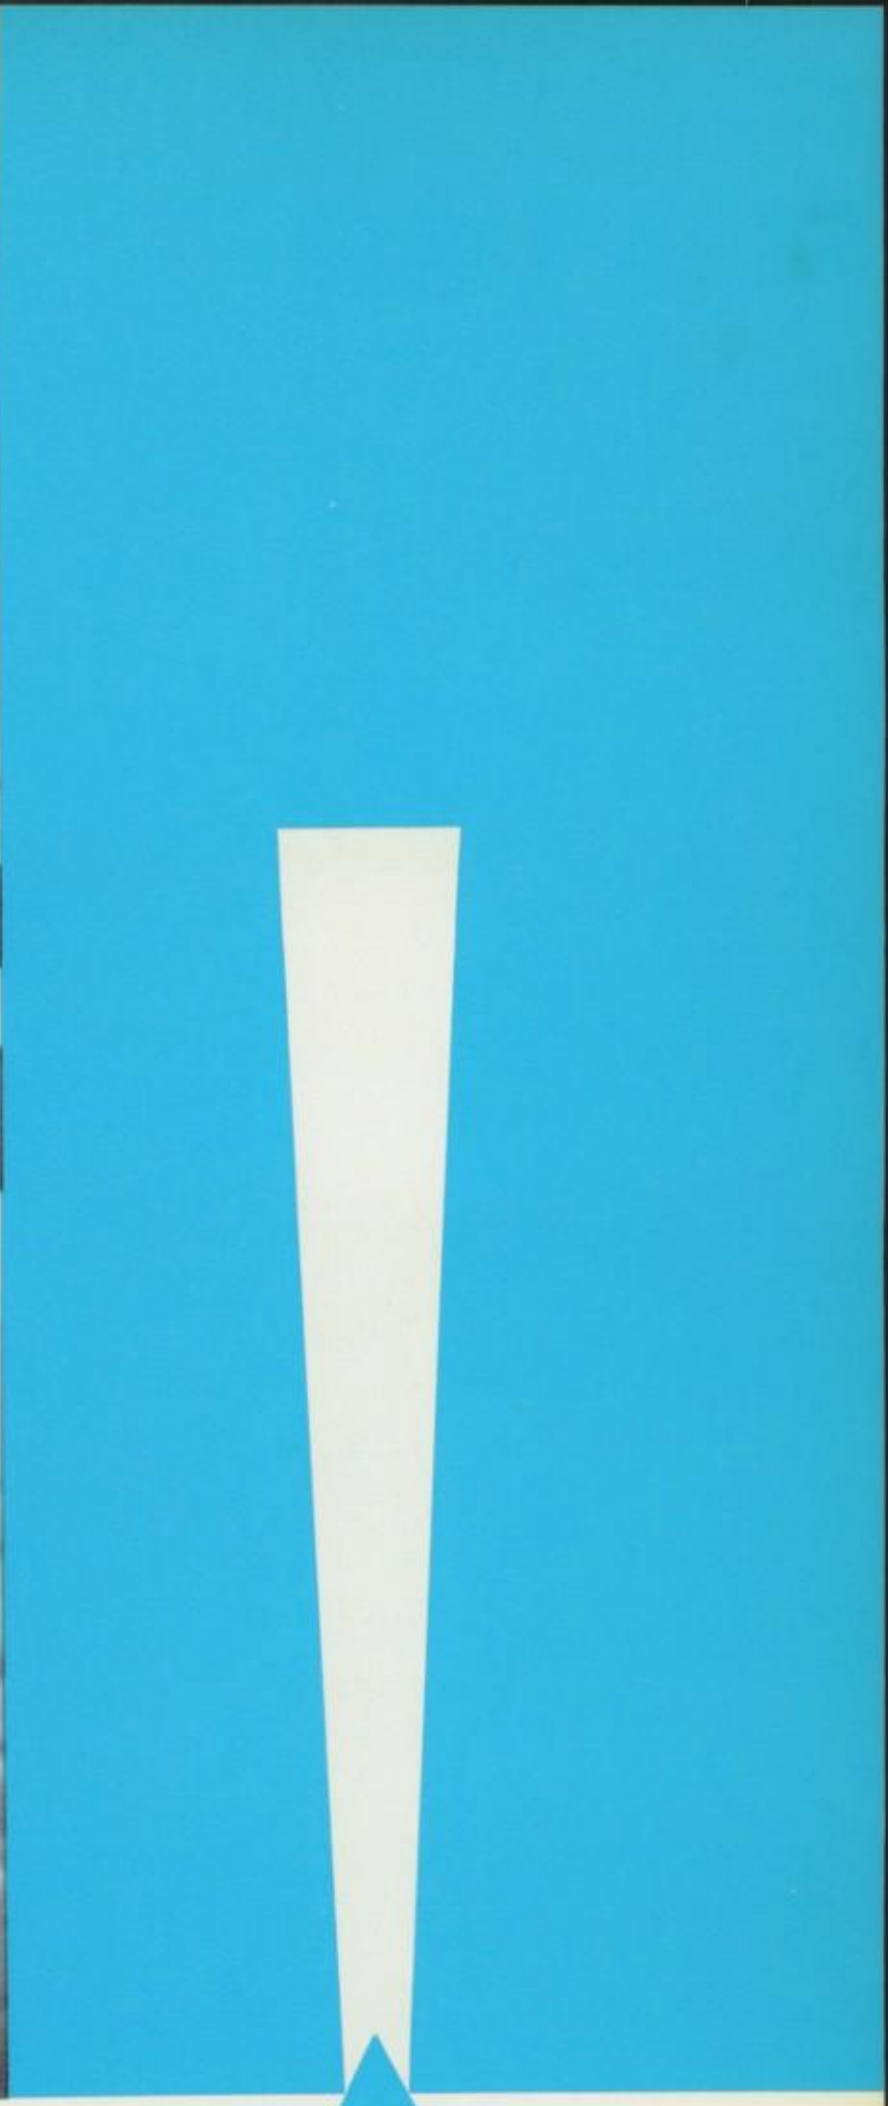

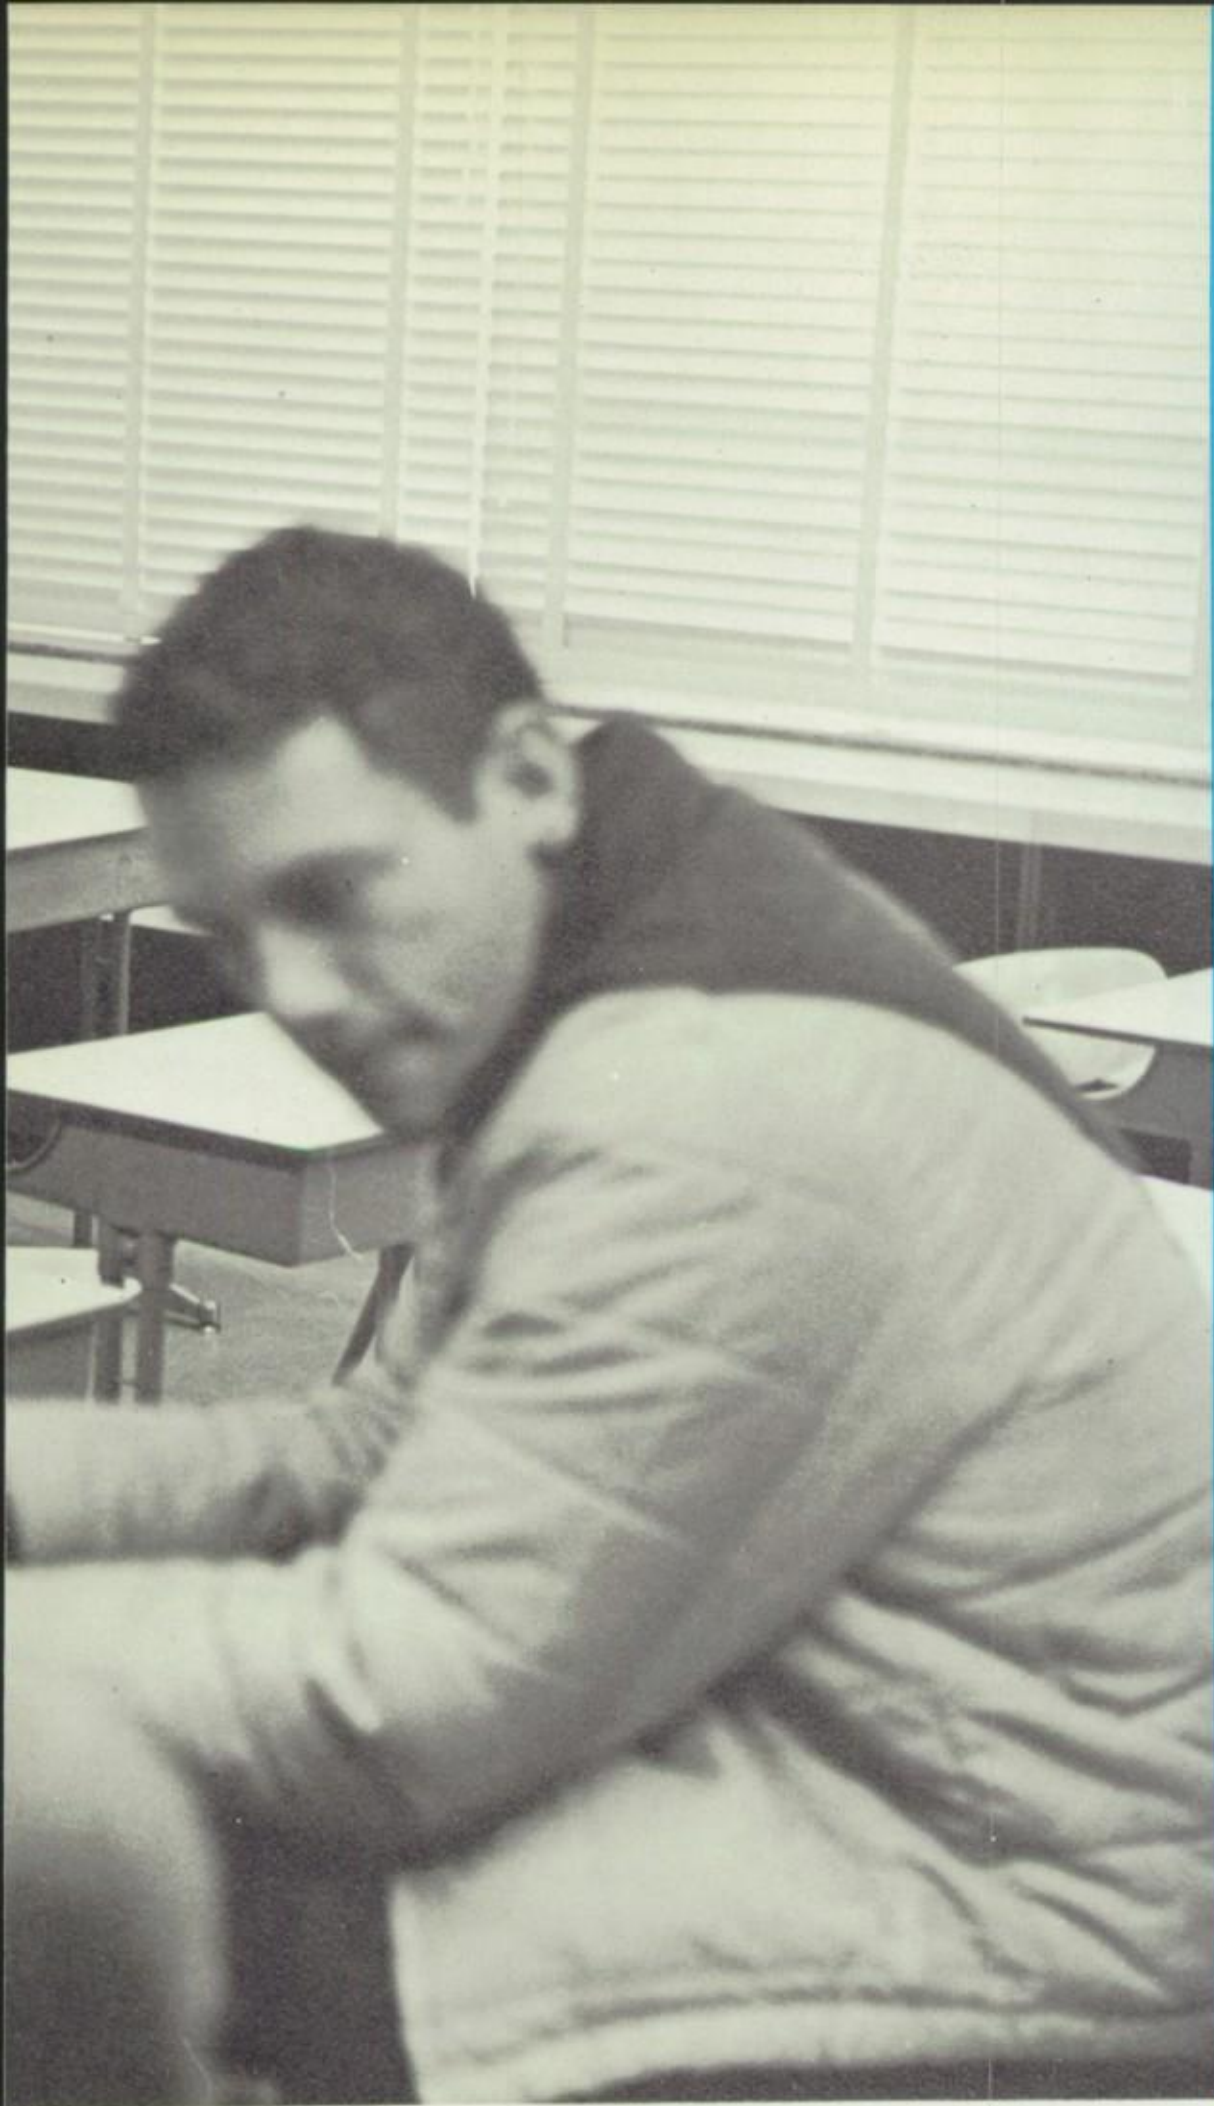

The Girl's Athletic Association is an answer to the problem of "the flabby American teenager." Its members get the extra exercise they need to keep in shape.

The activities of the G.A.A. are greatly diversified. Club members play organized sports, from tennis to baseball to volleyball. Miss Sells, the club advisor, demonstrates in the use of the trampoline. The G.A.A. girls tackle every sport with great enthusiasm.

Although not everyone can excel in a sport, he can develop a healthy mind and body through participation.

SOPHOMORES

Last year the sophomore had been the oldest student in the Junior High School. This year he was the youngest in the Senior High. This sudden change meant more to the sophomore than just a change in status. It introduced him to new pressures and presented him with many perplexing problems. He found out what it is like to stay up until midnight cramming for an exam. He was constantly plagued by the word "regents". He was forced to accept greater responsibilities and to start thinking seriously about his future. He suddenly realized he was becoming an adult.

Fortunately there was a brighter side to being a sophomore. He was able to participate in the many Senior High School activities. In November, he received his class jacket which he promptly flaunted all over town to show everyone he really was in high school. In the spring, his class held its first dance to earn money to finance their future projects.

Being a sophomore meant many things, new experiences, responsibilities, problems, and pleasures.

The Junior year of high school is a year of new experiences and new outlooks. Perspective college students are met with a barrage of tests including College Boards and the National Merit Scholarship Qualifying Test. Many Juniors also begin thinking about colleges or job opportunities. Aside from these new academic experiences, this year's Junior Class explored many other extra-curricular activities. THE RAIDER, our school paper, was a big success under their direction and also gave many students a chance to try their hand at journalism. In January the Junior Class organized the Junior-Senior Prom, a colorful and traditional function. A play and car wash are planned for the coming spring.

All these activities, along with classroom experiences, give each student a chance to discover his interest and abilities, and help form and mold next year's leaders of the school.

Karen Mateyak, Vice President; Jo-Ann Crine, Secretary. Missing - Andy Olenick, Parliamentarian.

The senior year is a year of old traditions and new undertakings, a time when the past is re-enacted and the future is begun.

The traditional mark of a true senior is his class ring. These arrived in early fall, followed later by cards and pictures. The seniors also presented their three one-act plays, a successful "Night with Conrad Seiler." As in past years, the seniors ran the concession stand at the football games, sold book covers, and held car washes to increase their treasury. The Yearbook was the main project with many seniors involved in the various phases of production. An important traditional event was the election of Linda Faller as Thanksgiving Day Queen. The annual Senior Day provided students with a chance to see what teaching is really like by allowing them to take over a class for a day. The McCombs Speaking Contest also gave seniors experience in oratory. A year of hard work was forgotten at the traditional Senior Prom.

The whole year is consummated with graduation, when each student takes with him into life the experiences of this year and all the others in high school.
